REACHING OUT

SIDE OURSELVES

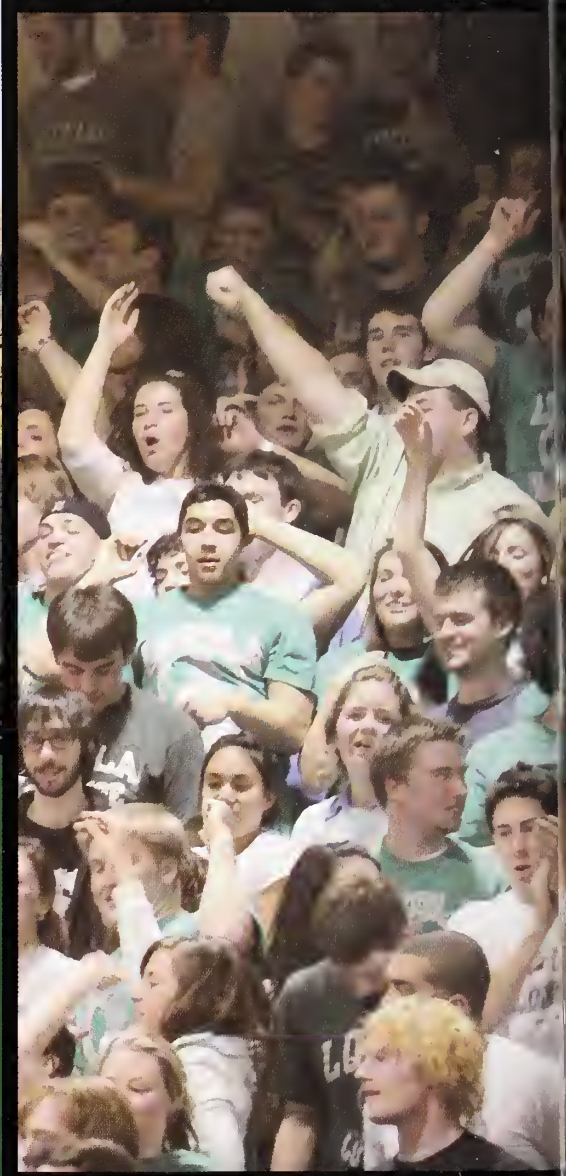

This year we found ourselves faced with a new challenge - to embrace Baltimore as our city. We came together throughout the year to meet our neighbors everywhere from our health fair to picnics to Loyolapalooza. We served our city by volunteering to help feed our homeless, educate our school children, and beautify Baltimore's neighborhoods. We learned about the rich history of our city, taking classes that would teach us about its architecture, its literature, and the events that have graced its streets. Most of all we surprised ourselves with the results.

In addition to learning more than we ever have about Baltimore, we grew within our Loyola community. And while we have always known that we are each precious parts of the home we call Loyola, this year we learned that we are also precious parts of the home we call Baltimore.

REASONS TO CHIEER

Events

"The moments of happiness we enjoy take us by surprise. It is not that we seize them, but that they seize us."

- Ashley Monagu

Chow down. Thanks to the work of SGA President Mike Hardy and Director of Social Affairs Phil Leverrier, pictured here, students can start off Initium Week with every college student's favorite thing - free food.

Funny man. Jim Gaffigan stops by to help finish up the week with a few good laughs. The audience "grew pale" at his jokes, in a good way of course.

Hats off to a new school year. Students embraced the western-themed event by donning hats and bandanas while eating typical barbeque food.

Initium Week

In spirit of the Year of the City, some Loyola students started Initium Week by volunteering for a service project at Northeast Middle School. Later that day, the Student Government Association hosted a western-themed barbeque on the Quad and distributed cowboy hats to attending students.

The week continued with a memorial vigil for the fifth anniversary of September 11th. The following day the college held a Year of the City forum and showed Mission Impossible III on the Quad.

On Wednesday night, the SGA hosted the annual Crab Feast to give students a taste of Baltimore. Tim Snow, Director of Commuter Affairs, said that the feast is a great opportunity for those out-of-state students who "haven't even had a crab. Many of them don't even know how to open them up."

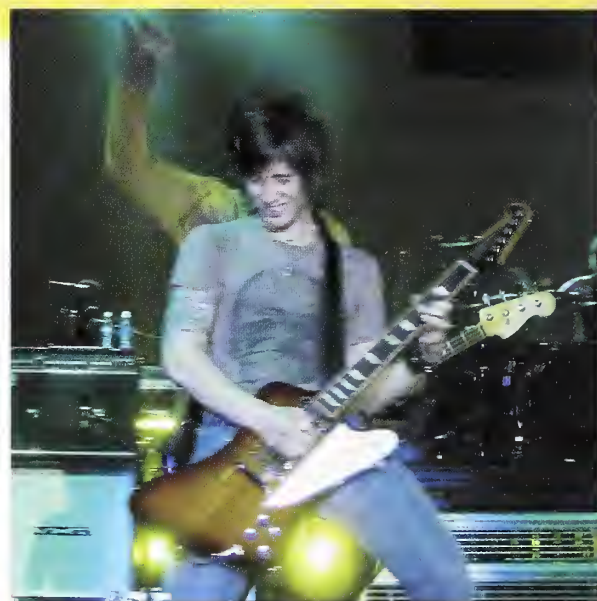

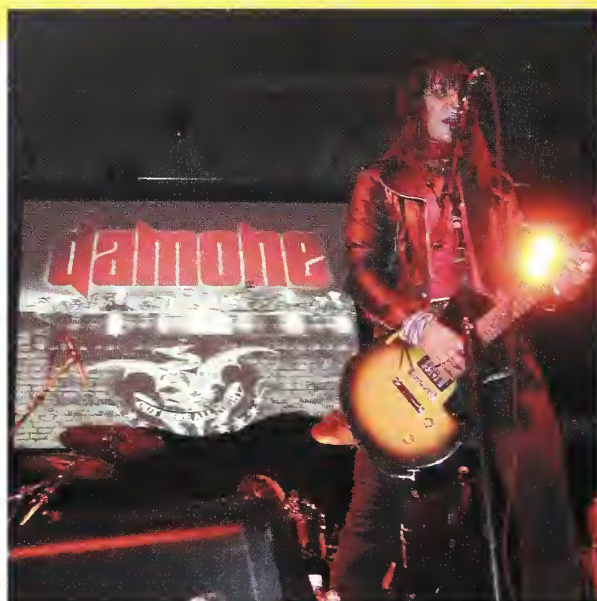

Initium Week wrapped up with a performance by comedian Jim Gaffigan. His set, consisting of many food jokes, kept the students laughing as he imitated the inner voice of an imaginary audience member. The performance was a great way to positively begin the school year and get students to take a break from the start of classes and enjoy a good laugh.

Kicking Off the School Year as a Community

Helping out. Thanks to the volunteer efforts of Henry Feild, Liz Waters, and James Porter, Northeast Middle School gets a fresh start with some newly painted walls.

Not too crabby. Even though the annual Crab Feast was held indoors this year because of rain, students still enjoyed the opportunity to dig into a Maryland favorite.

Head banging. Noelle LeBlanc, the lead singer of Damone, pumps up the crowd as her band starts the concert. The band hails from Boston and its style reminded many concertgoers of famous 1980s groups.

Taking the lead. Nick Wheeler, the lead guitarist of The Rejects, rocks out. The 23-year-old co-songwriter is also the co-founder of the band.

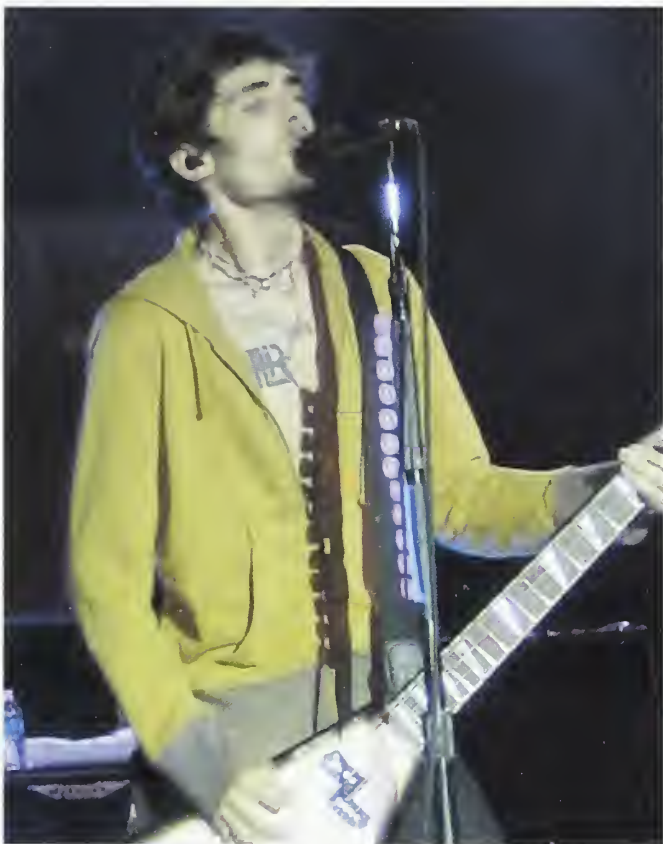

Accepted. The All-American Rejects have great stage presence. Their collection of songs, which range from ballads to rock-out jams, satisfied the anxious and screaming crowd.

Fall Concert

'Rejects Rock Reitz With a Night of Rock & Roll

The Student Government Association helped the student body swing, swing into a new school year with this year's fall concert. The event took place on October 8 and began with a performance by rock and roll group Damone. They started the show with a head banging set list that shook Reitz Arena, literally. The second of the three opening bands was Ima Robot, a hard rock group from Los Angeles. The lead singer wowed the audience with his unusual stage presence. The third and final opening act was Under the Influence of Giants, an alternative rock band also from Los Angeles. They attempted to mellow the crowd, but their upbeat music just seemed to get the audience more excited.

Finally, the anticipated headlining act, The All-American Rejects, took the stage. This punk-pop band from Stillwater, Oklahoma had the audience screaming before they even sang one note. Lead singer, Tyson Ritter talked frequently to the crowd between songs to get them energized. At one point in the show, Mike Kennerty, one of the band's guitarists, knocked down Ritter's microphone stand and proceeded to jump off the stage. No one seemed to mind when he ran into the crowd after that. The band played hits from their most recent album, Move Along, as well as some older songs that everyone enjoyed singing along too.

Songs and jokes. Lead singer Tyson Ritter croons while strumming away on his bass. In between some of The 'Rejects songs he humored the crowd with clever banter.

All wound up. Alex Ebert, the lead singer of Ima Robot, had a unique style of performing. Although unconventional, his methods seemed to capture the audience's attention.

Slice of pie. One of the most anticipated nights at Primo's is when they serve a traditional Thanksgiving feast, complete with an assortment of desserts.

Cool breeze. Many students take advantage of the comfortable temperatures in the fall and either study or play sports on the leaf-covered Quad.

Jack-o-lantern. Enjoying their time at a local farm, these girls take a break from pumpkin picking. Students got into the holiday spirit by taking trips to farms that sell homegrown produce and offer seasonal entertainment such as hayrides.

Fall Forward

Besides the usual holiday celebrations in the fall, there were many other activities for the student body to participate in. The semester was full of events both on and off campus, involving entertainment, education, and of course, plenty of food.

October began with the annual Week of Dialogue and this year's theme was "Embrace the Change" in correlation with the Year of the City initiative. Various lectures and discussions delved into some important issues facing the world today. Topics ranged from poverty, to racial and cultural problems, to fairness and justice issues, and included guest speakers who also interacted with the students in attendance. The week went very well and was well attended, encouraging the Loyola community to be more open to discussion of these issues.

The first holiday of the year, and one of the most popular, is Halloween. Students find several ways to celebrate besides decorating their dorms and dressing up in costume. Many groups on campus organized trips to pumpkin patches where students could pick out pumpkins or navigate through corn mazes. In addition, volunteers invited local children to trick-or-treat in the dorms.

Although most students go home for Thanksgiving, they still find ways to celebrate it on campus with their friends. Some groups of friends make their own turkey dinners or attend Primo's for its annual Thanksgiving spread. Overall, the busy fall season sets the stage for a year full of fun.

New Thoughts and Old Traditions

Start talking. Dayna Pizzigoni and Lauren Smith kick off the culminating event of this year's Week of Dialogue. Members of the Loyola community were provided with several opportunities throughout the week to hear about and discuss current issues.

Dialogue and dinner. Several students gathered to converse about the topics that were touched upon during the Week of Dialogue. The week provoked many new thoughts among the community.

Ready to rumble. Releasing some extra energy, the sophomore girls team throws up a cheer before kickoff. In the first half, they defeated the opposing freshman team 18-12.

Sweet victory. Raising the championship trophy, seniors Sean O'Sullivan and Mike Hardy celebrate their team's win. This year marked the third time the Class of 2007 won an FFC game.

In the stands. Exhibiting just as much energy as the players, the fans support their classmates. Junior Tom Saporito and senior John Barton led them in cheers while commenting on the games.

Fall Football Classic

Annual Game Reigns as Popular Way to Show Class Spirit

Year after year, the Fall Football Classic remains one of the most anticipated events. For a school whose basketball team draws the largest crowds, it is a nice change to get out on the field. The freshman girls kicked off against the sophomores as was determined by the inflatable jousting competition held the night before. The freshman defense, although strong, could not contain the sophomore efforts. The girls walked off the field with the score 18-12. As the boys took the field, the crowd anxiously watched a grueling match. In the end, the freshmen came from behind to continue the "first year victory" tradition, winning the first game of the night with a score of 24-18.

At halftime, the dance team performed and WLOY held a "Punt, Pass, and Kick" contest. But it was back to business when the junior and senior girls took to the field. After playing into nightfall, the seniors led 8-0. The boys eagerly began the second half. Despite a valiant effort by the juniors to gain a lead, the seniors ended this year's FFC with a winning score of 8-2. The Student Government Association did an excellent job of planning another safe and successful event that encouraged school spirit.

Ready, aim, fire. Looking for an open teammate, sophomore Galen Williams gets ready to throw the ball. He served as the team's quarterback.

Charging through. Excited to play their first FFC game, the girls from the freshman team run onto the field. Even though the sophomore girls led in the first half, the freshman boys were able to pull through for the win.

Interrogation. Called into Salem to investigate the accused women, Reverend John Hale, played by Rob Sampogna, questions MaryAnne McElroy as the young Elizabeth Proctor.

Authority. In order to maintain control in the small community, Deputy Governor Danforth, played by the dynamic Ryan Sekac, remains steadfast in his stance against witchcraft.

Suspicion. Later becoming accused himself, Tom Saporito as John Proctor, does his best to console a townspeople, played by Kendra Richard, as the play reaches its chaotic climax.

Fall Theater

Loyola's drama season started this year with glimpses of history. In November, the Evergreen Players produced Arthur Miller's The Crucible under the direction of Arion Alston. The play brings the audience back to Salem, Massachusetts in 1692 during the witch trials. It tells the story of Abigail Williams, played by Hilary Stingly, a Puritan woman accused of being a witch and the townspeople's reactions. Strong performances by the cast helped to personify the fear and grief that must have occurred during this turbulent time in early America.

A more recent time was depicted in the Poison Cup Players production of Taking Sides, directed by senior, Elizabeth Carlson. The small cast performed a show dealing with the separation of art and politics after World War II. Major Steve Arnold, played by Greg Westphal, is on the search to find those still associated with the Nazi party, and this time the suspect is Wilhelm Furtwängler, a popular German music conductor. During the investigation, he comes across a comedic violinist played by Len Savoleo and a distraught widow played by Mary Cameron. Bobbi Datz, as the stenographer, and David Hepburn, as the Lieutenant assist Arnold with the interrogations. Consisting mainly of intense exchanges, this drama remains tense throughout its entirety.

The Crucible and Taking Sides Send the Audience Back in Time

Accused. Entering the interrogation room, Paul Zajac as Wilhelm Furtwängler, played the strong-willed character with great conviction and seriousness.

Distraught. While being questioned by Major Arnold, Helmuth Rode, played by Len Savoleo, tries to get his story straight. The actor allowed his character to provide some necessary comic relief to this otherwise very serious play.

Check to cheek. Jenny Lipman and Liz Hohenadel pause on the dance floor for a photo. Everyone seemed to enjoy the music selection because the floor was crowded with dancers for most of the night.

Shout now. Almost everyone in the room participated in the classic dance song "Shout" by throwing their arms in the air. It was an exhilarating way to end the fun night.

Smile. Jenna Mizia takes a break from dancing to spend time with John Savrides and James Terry. The banquet room was large enough to contain the dance floor, several buffets, and tables where one could eat or relax for a bit.

Snowball Dance

Students Rock Around the Christmas Tree in Style

On December 11, 2006, students of all grades finished their last day of classes and then took part in an enchanting night of dinner, music, and dancing. RAC hosted its second annual Snowball Dance at the beautifully decorated Camden Yards Ballroom and, once again, it was a success. Tickets to the event sold out days before the actual night.

The attendees stepped out in their holiday best to celebrate the Christmas season and end of the fall semester in style. Students met up with friends, took pictures, and showed off dresses and suits while enjoying a scrumptious cheese platter, delicious pasta bar, and desserts to die for. The DJ played a variety of party music, alternating between modern hits and old favorites. The guests danced for hours in the garland and light covered room that overlooked Oriole Park. There were plenty of photo opportunities in the room, including a giant inflatable snowball and a visiting Santa Claus. For the second year in a row, it was certainly a memorable night to end the semester and begin the holiday season.

Strike a pose. Before heading out for the night, Leon Malloy, Teresa Cavallaro, and Steph Keohane show off for the camera in front of a festive backdrop.

Basic black. Dressed for the end-of-the-year occasion, these two enjoy a night off of campus and away from the books before exam studying begins.

The gift of giving. Donated presents are brought up to the tree in the Alumni Chapel during the Festival of Lessons and Carols. Presence for Christmas is one of the biggest service projects on campus.

Light the way. Gorgeous tall candles line the aisle of Alumni Chapel during the Festival. The event is highly anticipated and the space can barely fit all of those that attend.

Joyful sounds. The Chapel Choir sings Christmas music at Lessons and Carols. The rest of the congregation was given the opportunity to join in singing the more traditional carols.

Celebrate the Season

'Tis the season to be jolly, and Loyola certainly knows how to ring in the holidays. Between campus decorations, gift giving, and special events, the Christmas spirit could be seen and felt everywhere.

On December 8th, the Loyola community, which included students, faculty, staff, and neighbors, gathered in the Alumni Chapel for the 18th annual Festival of Lessons and Carols, a highly anticipated tradition. The luminous event combines music sung by the Chapel Choir, liturgical dancing, and readings of scripture by members of Campus Ministry. Those attending are even able to join in the singing of traditional Christmas carols.

Other events of the season included a bus trip to New York City, in which students had free time to explore the winter wonderland of the city, and later see the dazzling Radio City Music Hall's Christmas Spectacular.

Along with the celebrations, the Christmas season is also a time of giving. The sophomore class led the program Presence for Christmas, in which food and gifts were collected for many deserving families in the Baltimore area. Members of Campion's Ad Infinitum program worked on a service project called Grateful Giving, in which the members of this program collected, packaged, and delivered gifts to the children's ward at Johns Hopkins Hospital. As with most holidays, Loyola provided several ways to celebrate and get in the spirit of the season.

Holiday Activities Warm Up the Winter

Stringing up the lights. A balcony in McAuley is decorated with Christmas lights. Most of the rooms in the courtyard decorated for the holidays.

Here comes Santa Claus. A Loyola student dresses up like Santa to spread joy around the dorms during finals week. Spontaneity like this helped students take a break from studying and enjoy the season.

Conspiring. An unusual scene in the play showed Baal and a lumberjack, played by Miguel Peschiera, coming upon a dead body in a field.

Falling in love. At first, Baal experiences very strong feelings for Sophie, but later becomes disinterested and breaks her heart.

Unwavering loyalty. A passionate Ekert struggles to understand his frustrating friend Baal. Like this scene, many of the characters interacted in bars and taverns.

Winter Theater

Evergreen Players Shock Audiences With Baal

All that jazz. Cabaret singers, played by Pat Galloway, Kendra Richard, and Michael Paul, take a break after their performance.

Intense. These characters, played by Matt Anderson, MaryAnne McElroy, Liz Carlson, and Joshua Ferri argue at a tavern table. The play was full of complicated and controversial dialogue.

The drama performed by the Evergreen Players in McManus Theater this February was nothing short of unsettling. Playwright Bertolt Brecht is known for his edgy plays and Baal is definitely one of them. The story centers on the main character Baal, played by Joshua Ferri, and his life in early 20th century Germany. He is a poet and songwriter, traveling from place to place, drinking, socializing, womanizing, and occasionally performing his work. Baal travels with his friend Ekart, played by Paul Zajac. Ekart is a caring and emotional complement to Baal's shameless personality.

One of the biggest reasons why this play is so shocking and uncomfortable at times is because of the immoral relations Baal has with women. Throughout the play, he has affairs with them, some older and married, some young and off the street. Although he clearly uses the women for his own pleasure, stronger feelings than usual arise when he meets Sophie Barger, played by Lorraine Cuddeback, but they fade away once she becomes pregnant.

Although the play was at times bizarre and dealt with some heavy subject matter, the performance by the cast was amazing. The Evergreen Players put on a fabulous show, displaying each actor's dramatic abilities. Along with the simplistic stage setting and occasional songs, this show was definitely the showcase of the winter theater season.

Hopesquad. Committee members, including Jackie Davis, Amanda Kaestner, and Nicole Centrella, helped run every aspect of the event from setting up the venue to passing out food to the hungry participants.

All together now. Members of the committee put their hands in one more time to celebrate their hard work. All the hours of preparation paid off because this year's event was the highest-earning one in Loyola's history.

Purple power. Reitz Arena, barely recognizable because of several purple and white balloon arches, was the center of the event. When participants were not walking around the track, they spent a lot of time at their team's campsite.

Relay For Life

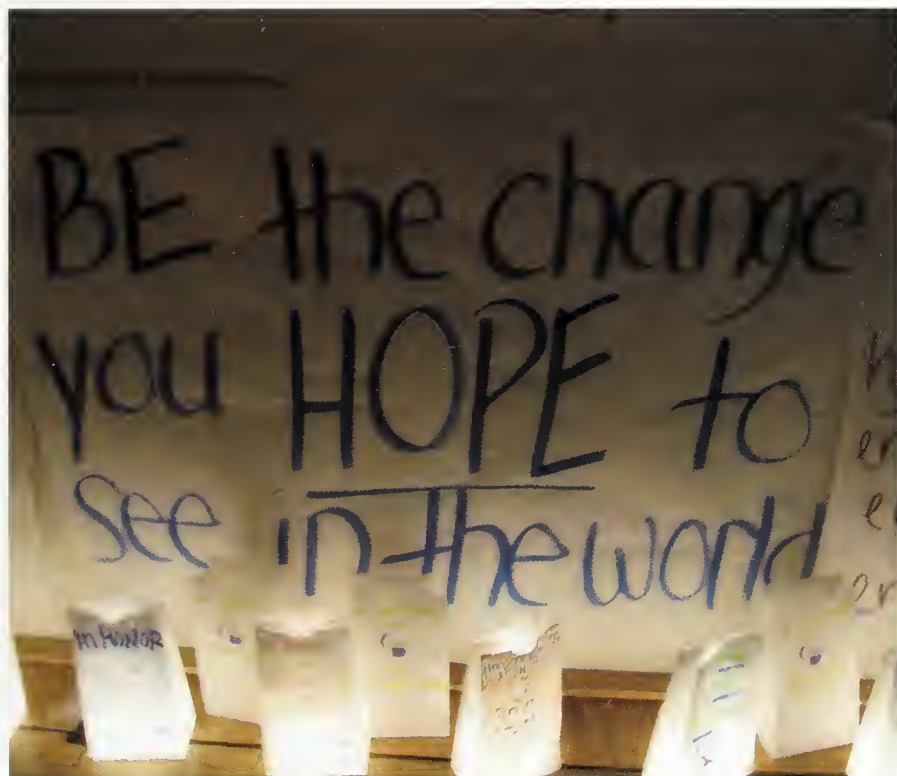

By Elizabeth Hohenadel

For 364 days of the year, Loyola students proudly sport their green and grey. However, for one long spring night we wear another color: purple. This night, March 31, marked the 3rd Annual Relay for Life at Loyola, a twelve hour long celebration of life, hope, and togetherness. Over 1,000 students, faculty, friends, and family filled the Student Center this year for the event that works to fight cancer by raising awareness and funding.

Members of the planning committee, led by juniors Ashley Biggs, Meg Orazio, and Cara Weigand, kept the crowd awake and upbeat with music, games, and contests. Decorated campsites spilled into McGuire Hall where student bands and comedians entertained while hungry walkers devoured snacks from local restaurants. Overall, this year's relay proved to be one of the wildest, most entertaining nights of the year.

By the end of the event at 7:00 am on the morning of April 1, it was announced that a grand total of $150,000 had been raised for the American Cancer Society, topping last years total by $20,000. With the record-breaking attendance and money raised, Loyola students proved their dedication to finding a cure for cancer - giving us all something we can stand by.

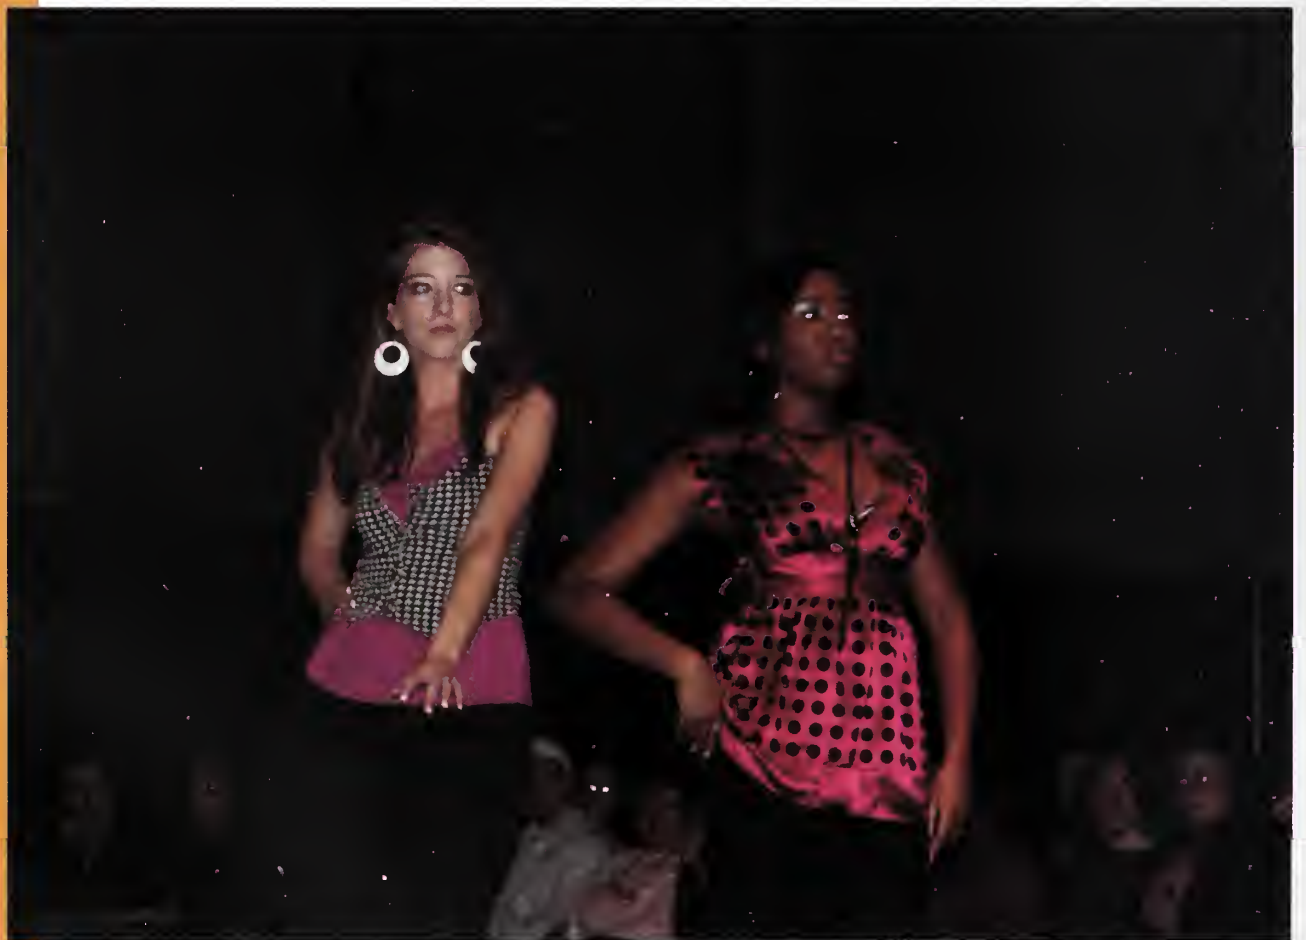

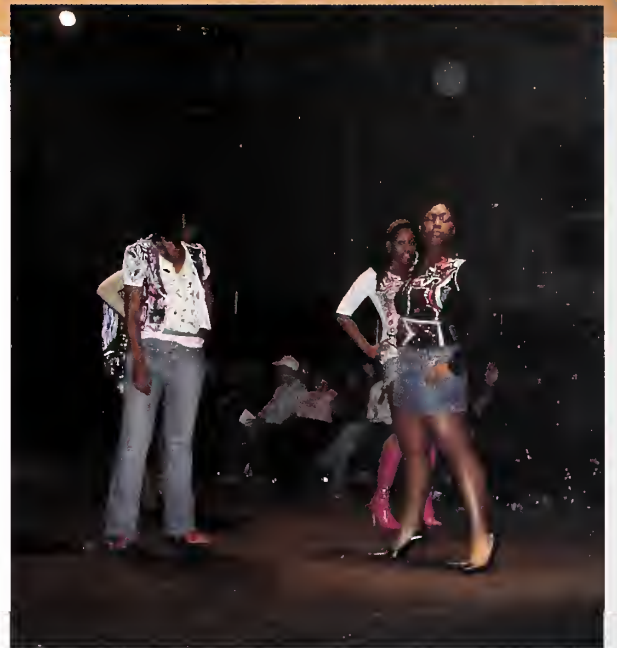

A Time to Celebrate, Remember, and Fight Back

Lighting the way. Signs with inspirational quotes such as this covered almost every wall in the Student Center. The track was also lined with luminaria bags, honoring those affected by cancer.

Pyramid scheme. One of the most popular events of the night was a campus-wide scavenger hunt where teams had to perform a number of tasks, such as take a picture of a human pyramid.

Cold shoulder. As part of the scene entitled "Lost Without You," Lauren Brown's casual outfit and smeared makeup contrasts with the male model's formal attire.

Follow the leader. Shanté Bassett leads this group of models down the runway as part of the scene called "All Mixed Up: Rock-Urban Fusion."

Funky and fancy. Despite these models serious faces, the fashions for the scene "Organized Chaos: It's the Lights" were bright and fun.

Fashion Show

"About Face" Turns Up the Heat For Spring

Not even the unexpected snowstorm on March 16th could take away the heat stirred up by this year's Black Student Association's Fashion Show. The student-run show entertained the audience with confident and fun presentations of the latest fashions. This year's show was directed by seniors Jasmin Conner and Shanté Bassett and hosted by Kathleen "Kat" Munford and Ebony Toliver, who delivered jokes and introductions between each scene.

The ninth annual event, held in Reitz Arena, featured student models wearing the clothing inspirations of local designers, an alumna, and current student. Styles ranged from 80s-inspired, sporty chic, evening wear, and even lingerie. The show was divided into six scenes choreographed by students. Each scene's music, lighting, clothing, and model formations were coordinated to portray a theme. Part of the intermission featured students from St. Mary's Elementary School showing off the latest gear from the Loyola bookstore. The cheers were overwhelming for the cute kids walking down the stage. A portion of the proceeds from this year's show was donated to the music program at St. Mary's.

Grin and bare it. Inspired by Victoria's Secret runway shows, the scene "City of Angels" had the models, including Maureen Hogan and Danielle Maddi, wearing minimal clothing and even angel wings at times.

Gluttony. In a scene that had models portraying the seven deadly sins, Catherine Thompson, serving as a narrator, watches over as Titilayo Sanusi and Nick Hawkins are tempted by overindulgence.

Causin' a scene. Lead singer of The Format, Nate Ruess, wails into the microphone. He entertained the crowd with not only his unique voice but also some funny commentary.

Smackdown. Two students fight to push each other of the pedestals. The joust continued its reign as one of the most popular activities of the day.

Eye to eye. Guster rocks out to a full crowd. Lead vocalist Ryan Miller knew how to make the crowd laugh, commenting many times on how he thought the St. Ignatius statue was staring at him.

Loyolapalooza

Every spring before finals week begins, we celebrate the end of another great year at Loyolapalooza, and this year there was even more to celebrate - the success of the Year of the City initiative.

The event, sponsored by the SGA and Student Activities, included the usual fanfare of food, live music, and games. However, this year, we invited the greater Baltimore community and added more activities to the day. There was a craft fair selling local hand-made creations, a basketball clinic hosted by both the coaches of the men and women's teams, and a showcase entitled Restoring Baltimore that presented oral histories of Baltimore neighborhoods created by Loyola students.

There was even more music for the audience this year. Guster headlined the event as part of their national College Consciousness Tour, which encourages environment-friendly practices. The Format opened for them, performing up-beat songs from both their old and new albums. Three local bands also had the opportunity to perform for the crowd on the Quad. Battle of the Bands winner Shook!, The Spotlight, featuring senior Mike Toohey, and D.C.-based Utris all took to the stage. The wide variety of music, along with all the people who attended, made this year's Loyolapalooza a true celebration of the past year and our community.

Annual Festival Gets Bigger and Better

Keep it together. Front man for Guster, Ryan Miller, pleased the crowd by singing several of the band's biggest hits.

Cool down. There was a wide variety of free food available to event attendees. Snow cones served as a perfect way to cool down on the warm spring day.

Sports

"Our philosophy precedes from the belief that sport is an inalienable part of the educational process and a factor for promoting peace, friendship, cooperation, and understanding among peoples."

- Juan Antonio Samaranch

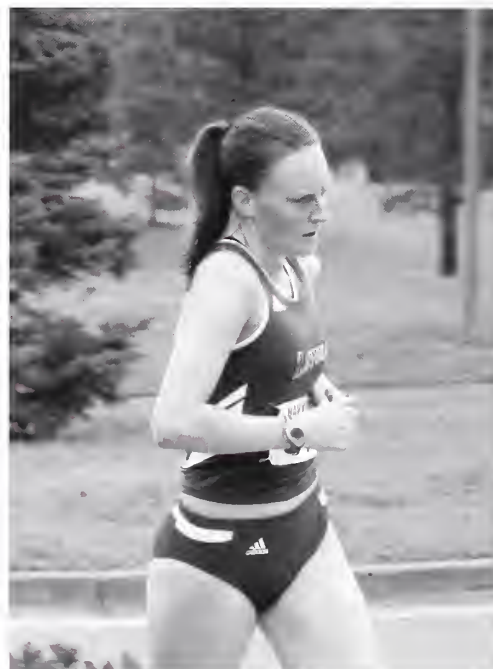

CROSS COUNTRY

Senior Sarah Spencer keeps her eye on the finish line as she pushes through a race. Spencer led the women's team at the ECAC/IC4A Championships, helping the Greyhounds finish in 13th place.

The men's cross country team earned its first-ever regional ranking this season, coming in at No. 15 in the Mid-Atlantic Regional rankings.

The women's cross country team had a strong year, placing fourth at the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference Championships.

Senior Patrick McCadden finished his last conference championship with an impressive showing at the MAAC Championships, where the men's team placed fourth overall.

It is crucial to a runner's health to stretch properly before a race, as demonstrated here by freshman Brendan Morrison.

MEN'S SOCCER

Junior Janson Blake kicks the ball out of the opposing team's goal zone. Having a strong defense is just as important as having a strong offense.

Three Greyhounds work together to keep the ball away from an opponent. Strong teamwork was essential during certain parts of each game.

Forward Omar Alfonso breaks away from an opponent. Alfonso led the team in scoring this season and was named to the NSCAA/Adidas North Atlantic Region All-America team as a result.

Midfielder Danny Wheelan shows off his flexibility as he reaches to kick the ball. Wheelan served as the team's captain this season, his second year holding the position.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

Fighting off a member of the opposing team, midfielder Lea Day gets ready to kick the ball. Day, a sophomore, was named the MAAC's Offensive Player of the Week back in October.

Head Coach John Byford gives the girls a pep talk before they head out to play a game. The Greyhounds held the number one seed in the MAAC this season before heading into the tournament.

Carolyn Kennington, a forward, works hard to keep this player from Rider away from the ball. This season the senior lead the team in points with six goals and five assists.

Midfielder Courtney Arikian nearly runs into an opponent while dribbling the ball down the field. Arikian, a senior, served as one of the team's captains this season.

Goalkeeper Brittany Henderson intercepts the ball before the other team could score a goal. Henderson, a freshman, was named the MAAC's Defensive Player of the Week back in September.

Head Coach John Byford and Assistant Coach Peye Garcia observe a game from the sidelines. Byford was named the 2006 Anaconda Sports Coach of the Year.

SWIMMING and DIVING

By Hannah DePaulis

The H2Ounds began the 2007 season with a bang, diving right into some of the most intensive training the team has seen in years. This was thanks to the addition of Michael Hoffman, the new full-time assistant coach. Hoffman has directed his efforts to improving and expanding the program. Thus, the Greyhounds endured a season of difficult training, including a rigorous ten-day training trip to Florida.

The hard work proved to be worth the effort, landing the team in the number three spot overall in the MAAC. This was the first season the team participated in the ECAC Championships in Boston, Massachusetts. Both the men and women's teams earned a spot within the top ten finishers. This season there were 45 top five swims, more than 80 personal bests, and four school records broken. Record breakers include: Meg Royer for 50 yard Freestyle; the 800 yard Freestyle Relay with a team of Megan Hadley, Emily Benton, Jennie Zohorsky, and Tori Kamauff; and Ryan Reeser broke the 500 yard and 1000 yard Freestyle records. MAAC champions included Ryan Reeser in the individual 500 yard Freestyle and Men's 200 yard Freestyle relay with the team of brothers Ryan and Brad Reeser, Drew Crampton, and EJ Verrico.

Though the swimmers put in long hours of hard work, the success of the team was, in large part, due to the effort and dedication of coaches Brian Loeffler, named MAAC Men's Swimming and Diving Coach of the Year, Michael Hoffman, Marko Turcinov, and Maureen Theis. A great year, a great team: Go H2Ounds.

This diver shows perfect form before he hits the water. The dive team worked hard to deliver accurate routines and earn points for the H2Ounds.

Focusing on maintaining a straight line, this swimmer races to the finish line in a backstroke event. The Greyhounds' competitive season lasts from October to February.

Before she springs off the board, this diver concentrates on the maneuver she is about to perform for the judges.

Members of the men's team get in position before the whistle is blown. Senior Ryan Reeser served as this year's men's captain.

The women's team consisted of almost twice as many swimmers as the men's. They were led by captains sophomore Victoria Kamauff and seniors Liz Chelbda and Bridgette Schertle.

Forward Omari Isreal reaches over an opponent for a lay-up. Shots like these usually got the crowd in Reitz Arena on its feet and cheering.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Starting point guard Shane James analyzes the situation on the other end of the court before dribbling the ball down. James frequently gave the other players signals, informing them what play was to come next.

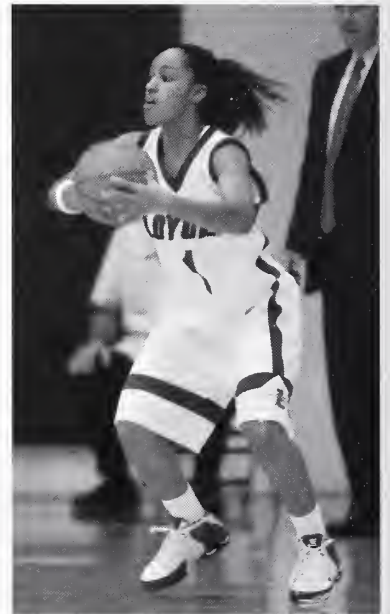

Gerald Brown, a guard, pushes past a Canisius player as he tries to make his way to the basket. Brown had a very successful season, receiving several recognitions in the conference and finishing eighth in the NCAA for scoring.

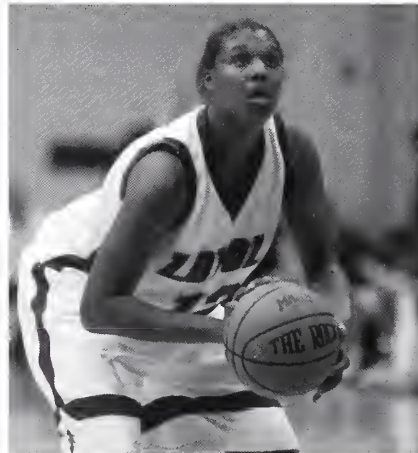

After receiving the ball, Josko Alujevic rushes past an opponent to set up a play. Alujevic's scoring in the MAAC Championship game against Fairfield helped lead the team to its first semifinal game since 1998.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Guard Ebony Toliver eagerly looks for a teammate to pass the ball to.

Freshman Kaitlin Grant sets up for a foul shot. The team had a successful year, placing third in the conference.

Erica DiClemente, a freshman, intently watches and waits for her teammates' next moves.

Forward Meghan Wood holds onto the ball tightly after a rebound. Displays of strength like this helped Wood earn a MAAC Player of the Week title back in January.

Senior Jill Glessner jumps among opponents to make a lay-up shot. Glessner led the Hounds in scoring this season, helping her earn a spot on the All-MAAC basketball team.

The girls' cheering gets fans out of their seats. They kept the energy in Reitz Arena high during the timeouts.

After throwing a flyer in the air, the girls on the ground anticipate catching her. Each game allowed the girls to show off their acrobatic and dancing skills.

While raising fellow cheerleaders, the girls raised the spirits of the fans with their amazing stunts.

CHEERLEADING

As the men's basketball team pushed through each game, the girls were always there to cheer them on. The cheerleaders contributed to a lot of the Arena's energy during the games.

The cheerleaders were still able to maintain their smiles while performing daring lifts. They spent many hours practicing these impressive feats.

Besides difficult stunts and pyramids, the cheerleaders entertained the crowd with dance routines and tumbling.

CREW

Teammates work together on the water. Love of the sport kept students going during demanding early morning practices.

All of the hard work put in by the women's crew team at practices helped it earn second place in the MAAC Championships this year.

MEN'S GOLF

Even though the eight members of the golf team had to carry their bags by themselves, this task occurred in unique tournament locations such as California, Florida, and Mississippi.

This player concentrates on lining up his putt. The team did well this season, placing second overall at the MAAC Championships.

Coach Tom Beidleman talks to one of his golfers before an event. Pep talks helped the players plan how they were going to approach the course.

MEN'S LACROSSE

This player runs around an opponent hoping to be open for a pass from a teammate. Outsmarting the other team proved to help the Greyhounds win games.

Attacker Dan Bauers rushes past an opponent towards the goal. In the game against St. John's, Bauers scored a career-high of six goals, leading the team to win the game.

Goalie Connor Locke listens intently to the coach's instructions. Effective coaching helped the team earn a spot in the NCAA Tournament this year.

Playing on defense, Eddie Graham works hard to keep the other team from scoring. The Greyhounds had a successful regular season, ending with a record of 7-5.

Steven Hess bends down to scoop up the ball before anyone else does. Moving quickly was an essential component of successful plays.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

Freshman Emily Gibson stands to defend the goal area. Gibson was a strong defensive and offensive player her first year on the team.

Midfielder Liz Peregoy keeps a close eye on a member of the opposing team. Keeping track of the opponents was important for defense.

Midfielder Jessie Heisterman reaches past the other player for the ball. Heisterman was known on the team for her great stick work.

MEN'S TENNIS

Keeping his eye on the ball, this player makes contact with a backhand stroke. The Greyhounds placed seventh overall in the MAAC this season.

The team takes a moment to huddle together and prep for the upcoming match. Strong communication was especially important for the doubles teams when developing strategy.

Reaching high, this player is about to successfully hit the ball to the other side of the court. The tennis teams have a spread out season, playing some matches in the fall and then the rest in the spring.

This player is in the midst of his serve. A powerful and accurate serve is necessary for the play to continue.

EXPAND THE MIND

Enrichment

"One of many guideposts on the path to wisdom points out that it isn't enough for an individual to become very skilled or highly knowledgeable in a specific area. In addition, one must make an effort throughout life at becoming skilled and knowledgeable about as many subjects as possible that affect the human condition."

- Ray Gattavara

(ALANA Clubs)

The executive board of the Caribbean Students' Union (CSU) enjoy themselves at their banquet. CSU works to spread knowledge and understanding of Caribbean culture by planning dance parties, lectures, and informational discussions.

Juniors Celeste Hernandez and Anter Gonzales present an award they received for the Asian Student Association (ASA). Celeste also won an individual award for leadership at the Night of Stars, the end of the year banquet put on by ALANA.

Black Student Association (BSA) members pose with Kweisi MFume during his visit for Black History Month. BSA assists with the planning of most of the lectures and activities throughout Black History Month.

Leona Garber sits with Raymond Reyes, Associate Vice President for Diversity at Gonzaga University. Leona served as the Vice President of the African Student Union, which integrates all African cultures and reaches out to the Loyola community to help them understand African culture, history, and experiences.

First-year students Paula Morris and Alejandro Santos, along with sophomore Claudia Andrade are all members of the Association of Latino and Spanish Students (ALAS). Alejandro served as president this past year, helping the club spread multi-cultural awareness of Latin American and Hispanic cultures at Loyola.

ALANA club leaders pose with Carroll F.S. Hardy at the Carroll F.S. Hardy Black Student Leadership Conference. This is a national conference attended by 1000 students and administrators annually.

Fists of Fury

Junior Mark Mangano prepares to break a series of wooden boards. Ju-Jitsu did not only teach participants martial arts skills, but also self-discipline and reflection.

Shore to Please

The Ju-Jitsu Club managed to get some training in at the beach. These practices were similar to lifeguard training, and helped to heighten their endurance, agility, balance, and strength.

Watch Out

Jennifer McNamara practices a kick on Kevin Dougherty. The Ju-Jitsu club, which held practices at the FAC, actually helped members advance belt levels.

Make a Mark

Senior Henry Feild, who served as the club's captain this year, stands and aims at the target. The club spent most of its practices perfecting their aiming and shooting skills.

Ready, Aim, Fire

Junior Jackie Kimball sets up her shot during a practice. The club competes against other schools in the MAAC Conference and MAAC Sectionals.

Gettin' Down

The entire team is in a position called "prone." The Marksmanship Club started off this season with the best season-starting score the team has ever seen.

(Project Mexico)

This photo captures a dancing moment between Project Mexico member Vittoria Di Prospero and a local Tijuana boy during the annual community fiesta funded by Los Niños as well as the Loyola College Project Mexico program.

P-Mexers Elizabeth Ferrara, Cathy Newman, Gerald Rooth, and Barb Parassio engage with the youth at Rancho Nazareth. Rancho Nazareth is an all-boys orphanage and it is the first stop on the Project Mexico trip.

This year's team was able to build and experience a strong sense of community with one another during the trip in January. In addition, they worked very well together in order to truly espouse the team motto of "uniting people and igniting passion."

Participant Jennifer Zimmerman shares a moment with a woman from one of the various communities that the group worked in. An important part of the experience is for participants to form relationships as well as community with the Mexican people through immersion in their culture.

Project Mexico leader Gregory Pace, Gerald Rooth, and Benjamin Smith work tirelessly along with everyone else on the team to make sure sand, gravel, and cement were properly placed for the community-directed work projects. Part of the Project Mexico experience is to interact as well as serve alongside others within the communities to help improve the local schools.

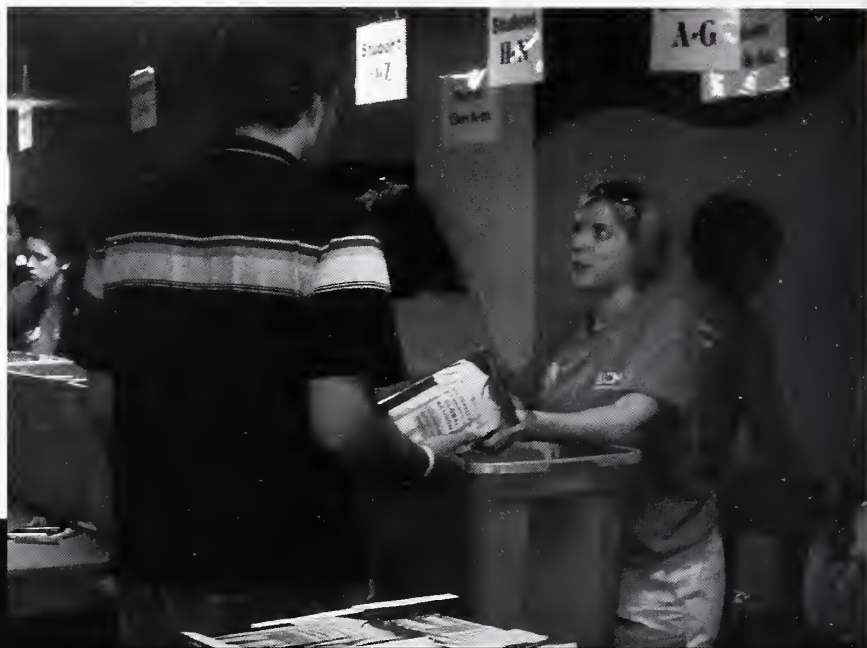

Kelly Gilligan, Project Mexico leader Carolyn O'Neill, and Elizabeth Ferrara work on mixing cement. Besides manual labor, these individuals were able to educate themselves and explore social justice issues faced by the people of the Tijuana community.

Participant Erik Schmitz peers through a part of the fence that forms the border between Tijuana and San Diego. Experiences throughout the trip helped participants to grow personally by exploring commitments to service and justice, as well as taking into consideration personal values, spirituality, and worldviews.

(Evergreens)

Senior Evergreen Melissa Haak hands an incoming member of the Class of 2010 his summer reading. The Common Text program is included in Fall Orientation every year and is the freshman class's first opportunity to interact with the faculty in an intellectual setting. This selection for this year was The Travels of a Tee Shirt in a Global Economy.

At the end of this year's Evergreen summer training, groups got together to perform for the annual talent show. These girls are doing a song and dance number, dressed as a boy band.

The Evergreens stop to pose for a group picture during one of the summer orientations. This is when the Evergreens do most of their work, preparing incoming freshmen for life at Loyola.

Evergreen Bryan Arva helps an incoming freshman and his family find out where they need to go for an orientation. The Evergreens organize and run the entire two-day event held during the summer for incoming students and their families.

Senior Evergreen Dan McGovern talks to a group of incoming freshmen during a summer orientation. The Evergreens are one of the main personal resources for freshmen on campus to learn what the campus and school are really like.

A group of freshmen, or as the Evergreens call them, shrubs, and their group leader stop on the bridge for a picture. The connections made between the students and their Evergreen, along with the other freshmen in their groups, help them ease into life at college before classes even start.

(CADET, CARE, and Italian Club)

Moment of Silence

Susan Leitholf, Mark Mangano, Janine LoBue, and Dennis Ryan of CADET do a station of the cross for the Easter celebration. Their station was "Simon Helps Jesus Carry His Cross" because they "find themselves compelled to help those who bear the burdens of addiction and substance abuse."

Group Hug

Members of CADET enjoy a dinner together during a retreat. The team participated in workshops to help strengthen its alcohol and drug education programs.

Happy Halloween

CADET sponsored a Halloween party offering students an alternative way to celebrate the holiday. The leaders partook in many bonding activities which aided in their effectiveness as educators for the campus community.

Stepping Down

Seniors Lauren O'Connell, Vernelle Grays, and Susan Leitholf received graduation gifts for their contributions to CARE. The group formed a cohesive bond during their years of peer educating and raising awareness of alcohol and drug related issues.

Celebration

These two peer educators enjoy a dinner at Batemans with other CARE members. This peer education group is devoted to providing information about wellness issues to the college community. They sponsor several events on campus throughout the school year.

Italiano

The Italian Club Executive Board includes Chris Wagner, Josh Rampson, Vincent Castellano, and Michael Mallia. The club spent the year promoting Italian culture through various activities and events.

Willing to do manual labor for several hours is what it takes to be a volunteer with Habitat. They are asked to work on several areas of the house's construction, including the foundation.

These girls put the final nails into the wall before it is lifted up. The Habitat volunteers had to almost redesign an entire house.

Volunteers fill in the holes of this brick wall with cement. Habitat for Humanity gives students the opportunity to learn about refurbishing and building houses.

These girls work to mix cement for various parts of the house. Teamwork is necessary to complete these projects successfully.

Habitat for Humanity volunteers hand over the keys of to the new home owner. The volunteers worked hard all semester for the moment when they can make someone's dream of owning a house come true.

Nail gun in hand, these girls are getting ready to install a doorway. The house that Loyola volunteers worked on took almost a year to complete.

This volunteer tries out some of the tools used for the project. The volunteers learned a lot of real-life skills while building the house.

(Encounter El Salvador)

The Encounter El Salvador group spends time with members of the community that hosted them. The program is very unique, because it is not direct service, but an opportunity for visitors to witness the joys and struggles of living in El Salvador.

Senior Karina Christiansen, graduate student Joshua Grubka, administrator Jane-Shock Osborn, and senior Sarah Sedgwick pose wearing traditional aprons. The volunteers were immersed into the culture while on the trip.

Encounter El Salvador volunteers served traditional Latino food during their fundraiser at the end of the school year. The money raised was donated to the El Salvadorian communities that the team visited in May 2007.

All the volunteers study The Wall of Truth, which displays the names of those who died in the civil war. The presence of the volunteers was different compared to other service projects. In Encounter El Salvador, the purpose is to observe, reflect, and serve as a presence of peace.

La Fiesta was held during the end of the school year to raise money for the Encounter El Salvador trip. Attendees enjoyed genuine food, music, and culture from the area.

The Encounter El Salvador members pose for a picture in one of the communities they visited. The group consists of Loyola undergraduate students, graduate students, faculty, and staff.

Commitment

During the ROTC Commissioning Ceremony in the Alumni Chapel, the graduating members of the battalion are named Second Lieutenants in the United States Army. They will begin their terms in the armed forces after graduation.

Standing Proud

No longer Cadets anymore, the ROTC graduates stand with their instructors and Fr. Linnane. Throughout the program's history at Loyola, over 1,100 students have been commissioned.

National Anthem

Some ROTC Cadets present the flag for the singing of the national anthem before a women's basketball game. Members of the battalion performed this task for several campus events throughout the year.

Guidance

One Cadet leads another through a drill. The training the ROTC participants received through their years were very helpful for when they will join the U.S. Army after graduation.

Watchful Eye

Senior Greg Galeazzi poses for a picture during training at the FAC pool. Because of the limits of a college campus, ROTC training had to get very creative at times to make use of the available facilities.

A New Mission

While participating in a weekend retreat, the Cadets listen intently to the directions given by one the program's instructors. Although a lot of training takes place on campus, trips are necessary for the participants to experience different terrains.

(Belles and Chimes)

The Belles are all smiles after singing the National Anthem at Camden Yards. The girls' voices had to be open to change, as they did a number of different types of shows throughout the year.

An appearance by the Belles at a private party is a major item to bid on at the Project Mexico Auction. The girl group often served as entertainment for fundraisers on campus.

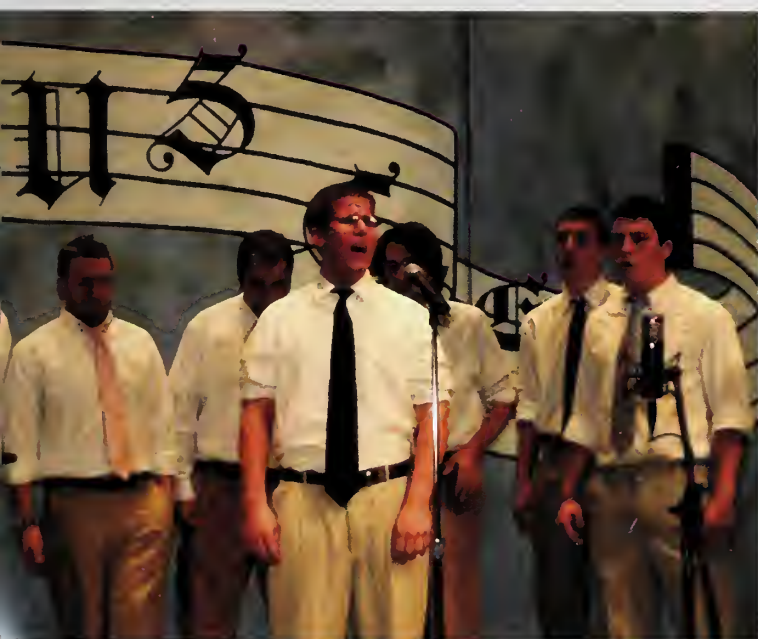

With supporting backup harmonies, this Belle performs her solo at the spring Chordbuster concert. Almost every girl gets to perform a solo throughout the night.

The Belles pose for a group picture after their winter concert. For each event, the girls choose a color scheme to dress in.

The Chimes belt out the National Anthem before a basketball game on campus. The a capella group never used recorded music to perform any song.

Peter Bartels performs his solo during a Chordbusters concert. The events are the biggest concerts for the a capella group, where they are joined by the Belles.

Dan Walker finds it hard to keep a straight face during Jim Minichiello's solo. The group had many inside jokes that often became apparent during performances.

(Dance Company)

Intermediate hip hop, co-taught by Corinne Cicero and Cara Di Guiseppe performs to a medley of songs by Beyoncé, Ludacris, and P.Diddy entitled "Are You Ready to Press Play?" Hip hop is by far the most popular genre of dance that the Company offers.

The intermediate ballet class dances to the song "Hide and Seek," choreographed by sophomore Jess Silinonte. The Dance Company is the largest student run organization on campus with over 150 students.

All the seniors in the Dance Company seniors performed to a Michael Jackson medley. It has become tradition that each year the graduating class puts together a dance comprising various genres of dance, including tap, hip hop, ballet, and jazz.

Choreographed by senior Carolyn DeSiena, the intermediate tap class took the stage with LCDC's own version of the Broadway hit STOMP. Performing a cappella, the dancers created their own rhythm with their tap steps and "instruments" such as brooms, a chessboard, and even sneezes! This number was a favorite among the Company and the audience alike.

The soft shoe Irish step class performs to "Reels." The show, held on March 15, 16, and 17, 2007, coincided with Saint Patrick's Day and was the perfect year for the debut of Irish dance at a Company show. Teaching both hard and soft shoe, sophomore Janine LoBue welcomed both beginners and experienced Irish dancers into her classes.

The advanced hip hop class dances to Ciara and Ludacris's "Oh!" This year, the Dance Company sold out all three of its shows, boasting a record-breaking year. One of the most well attended club activities on campus, LCDC's annual show features all student choreographed performances of ballet, modern, jazz, hip hop, tap, Irish step, and musical theatre.

(Spring Break Outreach)

Digging In

These students are organizing donated clothing during their trip to Camden, NJ. During their time on SBO, the students had the opportunity to help the local area in several aspects.

More Than Mardi Gras

This outreach group stops their hard work on a house to pose for a picture. Their program was in New Orleans, lending a helping hand to Hurricane Katrina relief.

Local Love

Spending their spring break locally, these students help out at Our Daily Bread, a meal program in downtown Baltimore. The Baltimore SBO option was reintroduced this year in spirit of the Year of the City initiative.

Cleaning Up

Putting in some manual labor, these students are part of the Violet, MS outreach group. Most of their efforts on the trip were devoted to cleaning up Hurricane Katrina wreckage.

Restoration

These two girls help to restore an old theater in Fries, VA. The volunteers got to bring life back to some of the dilapidated buildings and areas of their destinations.

Play Time

These volunteers organize activities for the local children. Many of the outreach programs involved spending time and working with children.

(Academic and Special Interest Clubs)

Venyda Whitelock, Kenneth Fontaine, and Chenelle Frank are members of the Institute of Management Accountants (IMA). IMA consists of faculty, students, and administrators to further interest the field of management accounting and promote networking relationships.

During the year, the Math Club took a trip to Harper's Ferry, West Virginia. The club participated in a variety of activities, not always relating to math, to keep things interesting.

Beta Gamma Sigma is the national business honor society. Officers include: Jay Rosen, Sean McElroy, Michellene Kerr (front row); Jessica Manning, Annette Fidecaro, Elizabeth Vitro (middle); Erin Neumann, Maryann Petkovsek, and Lauren Gelber (top).

The officers of Beta Gamma Sigma surprise new members during one of their classes to invite them into the society. The organization has very strict and challenging qualifications for membership and it is considered the highest honor to receive at a business school.

The members of the Loyola Christian Fellowship (LCF) enjoy their fall retreat. LCF is a group of students who commit themselves to God, Christianity, and a life of spirituality, while also helping others on campus do the same.

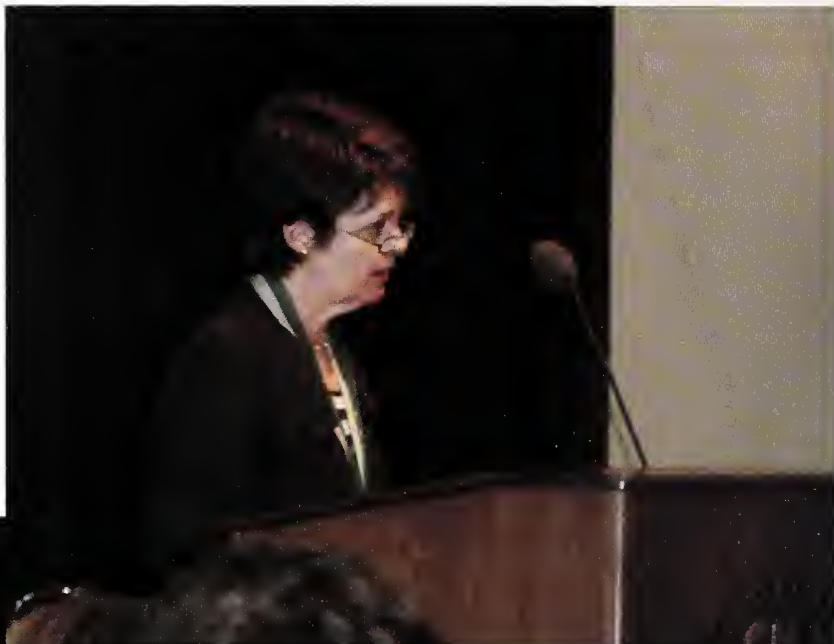

Members of the Police Athletic League (PAL) help out during Relay for Life. PAL volunteers spend time with local children, acting as positive role models while participating in activities with them during their free time.

Anter Gonzales, Nick Hawkins, and Ian Todd are a few of the members of NRHH, National Residence Hall Honorary. The organization recognizes leaders in the school that contribute to making campus housing "more than just dorms."

(Culture, Cake, and Cars)

Johns Hopkins professor and award-winning author Alice McDermott came for the Year of the City's version of the Modern Masters Reading Series. McDermott read from her bestselling novel Charming Billy and was later awarded the college's Andrew White Medal for her contribution to literature.

Baltimore native and former House Representative Kweisi Mfume spoke to the Loyola Community to kick off Black History Month. He spoke of the challenges of growing up in Baltimore and how he came into politics.

The Year of the City initiative even extended into the Maryland Day festivities held on March 23, 2007. To help celebrate, "Ace of Cakes" star and Baltimore baker, Duff Goldman, made a replica of the Humanities Center out of cake, which was later devoured by appreciating members of the college community.

The Student Commuter Association held a campus wide contest for the coolest cars. Student submitted pictures of their cars and the top three were chosen.

First place was awarded to a 1976 pearl white Mustang II owned by junior Tim Snow.

This 1995 jet black BMW 325is driven by sophomore Todd Green received the honor of third best car on campus.

ALONG THE WAY

Underclassmen

"The road of life twists and turns and no two directions are ever the same. Yet our lessons come from the journey, not the destination."

- Don Williams, Jr.

freshmen 2010

President: Charlie Taibi

Class Assembly: Corinne Balestrino, Ashley Bergmann, Dennis Delany, Allegra Estevez, Mary Kiernan, Kristen Muscarella, Elizabeth Smith, Paulina Stachnik, Courtney Vaneria, Meghan Vaneria

In the beginning of the year, we came from an enjoyable summer with friendly recognizable faces to join a very new and unfamiliar Loyola. After a year in college, we have acclimated to our surroundings and have begun to foster relationships that we will retain for the rest of our lives.

The year began for our class at the Fall Football Classic where we crushed the unbeatable sophomores in a fun-filled night of school spirit. We continued by participating in several class conferences and selling class sweats. Our A Night on the Town Semi-Formal was next and it left us with memories of friends and lots of chocolate.

As freshman class president, I have watched the class of 2010 begin the building blocks of what I see to be successful years at Loyola. I believe we have certainly started to build a community and develop our character, two important aspects that I focused on in my platform for freshman class president.

I believe the creation of our character is a process - a series of beginnings - gaining lessons from experience and putting those lessons into practice. Already, our time here at Loyola has further developed our character and with a continued sense of unity, I think we can enhance all facets of our college life.

Our time here at Loyola is moving fast. I encourage all of us to live out the Jesuit ideals and excel in our respected academic fields, laugh with our friends and cherish the memories, love that we are here at Loyola, and use our talents to serve both Loyola and Baltimore, our new familiar home and community.

Talk About It,

Charlie Taibi

Freshman Class President

“ OAE Pre-O did not just allow me to don my backpack one more time and escape into the woods before beginning college, but also gave me a head start on meeting new people and making new friends; so when the first day arrived, I didn't feel lost and alone. ”

The Language Enhancement and Advancement Program (LEAP) is coordinated by the Modern Languages department. It serves as a refresher course for students who plan to take French, German, Spanish, or Italian classes in the fall.

Participants of the Student Orientation to Service (S.O.S.) program, run by the Center for Community Service and Justice, get close for a bonding activity. Throughout the week prior to freshman orientation, these students participated in social and service activities that centered on the issues, concerns, and realities of poverty in Baltimore.

A group from the Outdoor Adventure Pre-O program, sponsored by OAE, strikes a pose after finishing an icebreaker. Students had the opportunity to take part in backpacking, caving, rock climbing, sea kayaking, whitewater rafting, or canoeing adventures while getting to know each other.

S.O.S. provides incoming freshmen with the opportunity to become involved in service from the moment they step foot on campus. Pictured here at Beans and Bread, a meal program in Fell's Point, the group helps make sandwiches for the over 400 people who visit the facility daily.

After completing a service project, this group from Campus Ministry's Connections program takes a trip to the Inner Harbor. Students are placed into groups facilitated by upperclassmen and learn about all the ways to become involved in Campus Ministry.

Here, a group of freshman girls gets to know each other on the Bay Lady Cruise. The event was held on September 21, 2006.

Dean Ilona McGuiness and the Academic Mentor Team hosted an ice cream social on the Quad in September for freshmen. It provided them with an opportunity to ask upperclassmen about Loyola's academics. // The first annual Alpha Poster Board contest happened on December 4-6, 2006. Posters created by the Alpha students were judged on how well they demonstrated intellectual excellence, diversity, and critical understanding, in addition to other undergraduate learning aims. // The Majors Fair in February gives freshmen and sophomores a chance to talk to professors and upperclassmen about Loyola's major and minor offerings.

Another fall event put on for the freshmen was a cruise on Baltimore's Bay Lady in the Inner Harbor. Participants enjoyed a night of eating, getting acquainted, and dancing.

In the second annual Egg Drop Contest and Ice Cream Social, students competed against one another to build a device that would keep an egg safe in its fall from the fourth floor balcony of the Student Center. Their devices had to be homemade, weigh less than 2.2 pounds, and cost less than twenty dollars to make.

Megan Rampone, Eric Sappington, Andrew Velazquez, and Liz Parolski went on the second Freshman Retreat of the school year, held the second weekend back from winter break, January 26-28, 2007.

Carl Northrop and Erin McDermott enjoyed time spent together on the retreat. Downtime and discussion groups allowed the freshmen to get to know each other on a more personal basis throughout the weekend.

The freshmen, along with faculty and student leaders, traveled to the new retreat center, Rising Phoenix, in western Maryland. Here, one of the small groups takes a break from their conversation to take a picture in the beautiful mountain scenery.

“ The Freshman Retreat was an awesome weekend full of forming new friendships and looking deeper into ourselves and where we are on our own individual faith journeys. The team was amazing and shared several inspirational stories of faith, strength, and compassion. It truly was a memorable experience, and I have come away with so many new friends and fun memories! ”

Sponsored by Campus Ministry, the Freshman Retreat was offered in both November and January. Pictured below, the twenty six January Retreat freshmen gather as a group before departing from Rising Phoenix.

Reflecting on the past year, it all seems like a blur. Though statistically it is likely we only remember 20% of what we learned in the classroom, it's hard to forget the good times shared with great friends. Though we lost, the Fall Football Classic was ballin'. The girls beat the freshmen in the first half, while the boys put up a good fight in the second. Later in fall, we gathered for the sophomore BBQ, though it was more fun to eat turkey legs at the Maryland Renaissance Festival. In light of the holiday spirit, the sophomore class sponsored Presence for Christmas and provided meals and gifts to over 600 families in Baltimore. The Office of Sophomore Initiatives highlighted many of our weekends with Mystery Bus and RoadTrip.

March showed off the sophomore boys as they strutted their stuff in the Mr. '09 Pageant. Volunteers showed their compassion at the 2nd Annual Sophomore Service Day, and in April they helped to wake up the campus about global issues. All enjoyed a final night of beauty, food, and dancing at the Masquerade Semi-

Formal at the Sheraton Inner Harbor. And this is only a glimpse of the fun, the hard work, and the service that our class contributed. When did we breathe?

With our professional futures nearing closer, we decided on a major to help us follow our dreams. Hopefully, we strengthened a friendship, formed a new one, and explored our passions beyond the classroom. As we near graduation and worlds of opportunities, our class grows together. On our own, we all in some way have experienced a year of growth and became more independent. I hope that sophomore year helped to make Loyola College your second home. Good luck to those studying abroad next year and remember that your Loyola home will be anxiously awaiting your return. Make the most of these next two years; they'll go faster than the last. Immerse yourself in every experience, don't miss out on the opportunities in front of you, and be patient as you work toward your goals. Thank you for making this a most memorable year. My best wishes to all!

Sincerely,

“On RoadTrip, we learned from each other that sometimes it is okay not to have all the answers. As long as you pursue the things in life that bring you joy and as long as you find a way to share that joy with the rest of the community, the answers you are searching for will eventually fall into place.”

- Jillian Liston

Sponsored by the Office of Sophomore Initiatives, RoadTrip is a weekend retreat in Lancaster, PA for members of the Class of 2009. It takes place the last weekend of winter break and is meant to be a time of personal discovery and discernment for the participants. // Even though the schedule was packed full of activities, talks, and discussions, the sophomores had some time to relax too. Here, a large group starts up a game of Catchphrase. // Discussion groups facilitated by upperclassman leaders, called Atlases, encouraged reflection and bonding among the participants.

"Getting to Know You" skits helped get the RoadTrip participants and leaders, comprised of upperclassmen, faculty, and staff, ready for the weekend.

Sasha Buerano and Lizzie McQuillan take a break from the RoadTrip activities to pose for a picture. The weekend encouraged new friendships and strengthened old ones.

“ The Mr. '09 Pageant was definitely one of the funniest and most rewarding things I've done here at Loyola. All of the contestants were buddies by the end of it, and I, as well as everyone there, really enjoyed Chris Miraval's rendition of "SexyBack." It was a real honor even being nominated for the title; I love the Class of 2009. ”

Kristen Henkel and Laura Glicksman enjoyed time spent with each other and fellow classmates at the dance.

The night allowed the sophomores to reconnect with others they may not get to see that often, such as the group of Evergreens pictured here.

“ My favorite part of the Sophomore Semi-Formal was seeing some of the masks people brought for the theme. It was also a great chance for me to bring my boyfriend to a Loyola event and introduce him to my friends. ”

To the Class of 2008,

It is hard to sit here and write a one-page letter that encompasses the things each of you have seen and experienced, the places you have been, and the impressions these events have had on you over the past year. Some of you have been to the most traditional of cultures and civilizations, others to the most exotic of places, and some remained here at Loyola doing great things.

Over this year we have laughed at Jim Gaffigan, we have rocked with The All-American Rejects, we have experienced an excruciating, yet fun, Fall Football Classic loss at the hands of the seniors, we have lived it up at the historic Belvedere Hotel for our Junior Formal, we have fought for a great cause at Relay for Life, we have ended the year with a bang at Loyolapalooza with Guster, and we have traveled the world, just to name a few fun, memorable, and excellent times.

Most notably, however, we have completed the majority of our college experience. Although this brings out some bittersweet emotions, it is certainly something to be celebrated when one considers what the Class of 2008 has accomplished thus far. So instead of looking at this coming year with apprehension, let us embrace it and continue to leave our mark on Loyola as we have been doing for three years.

Make sure you take your list entitled "Things to Do Before I Graduate" and complete it, because, before you know it, the day will come when we will have to decide if it is possible to make it to a few hours of the Preakness after graduation. So until then, keep on doing what you love, excelling at what you may not want but have to do, and experiencing what you encounter, because the next phase of life is a short year away from this letter.

On behalf of my fall and spring assembly members, I would like to thank all of you for a tremendous year. I have enjoyed every minute of having the honor of being your class president. There is one year left, let us make it our best yet.

Sincerely,

Michael P. O'Keeffe

Class of 2007: Farewell! Senior gift fund passes giving goal

By Megan Puscas

The need-based scholarship will be awarded in the office of the And. Because it is an endowment, it will grow over time, and members of the class will be able to contribute in the future, as it is not a one-time award.

"We don't want this to be just another scholarship, we want it to go to someone with a diverse background," said Senior Class President Blair Puscas. "That doesn't necessarily mean it has to be a minority student, just someone ... who is a good communicator, and able to rally around a common goal, which is really what the senior class is all about," said Megan Sneringer, annual giving officer.

"It is an extremely high participation rate and we're not even done yet," said Puscas. This validates for me and a lot of other students, a statement about the class of 2007. This says a lot of great things about us if half of us have decided to come together to support a lot of scholarship donors.

Cadets eager to put training to test

By Dave VandenBerg

Freshman, Cadet

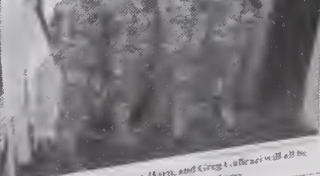

"I've been training for this for so long. At some point you want to get out there and use the skills you were trained on," said Greg Calabrese, senior ROTC cadet.

It is a sentiment shared by many of the seniors in the ROTC program, who are as little as one year away from a possible deployment in Iraq or Afghanistan.

The ROTC class of 2007 is the first class to sign up for the ROTC program after the invasion of Iraq occurred.

For students like Calabrese and his fellow senior cadets Harry Harp, Kyle Repucci, and John Tullis, the reality of war did not deter them from ROTC.

Said Tullis, "We didn't really look at whether there was a war going on or not. We looked at the higher ideals like honor and country."

Joe Gibbs, Kyle Repucci, Harry Harp, and Greg Calabrese will all be commissioned as officers into the United States Army.

President: Blair Puscas

Class Assembly: Rosie Allen, Alexis Aloï, Brittany Conahan, Paul Cubita, Harry Harp, Heather Monroe, Carolyn O'Neill, Rob Sampogna

To the Class of 2007,

Having to write this letter is probably my least favorite task of being class president. I have delayed writing it for as long as possible because it means that the end is near and that we will all soon be real "adults."

I remember writing the same type of yearbook letter almost four years ago as freshman class president. College life was just beginning for all of us. The future was bright, and we all wondered if and where we would go abroad, whom we would become close with, and what we would major in. Each and every one of us has had a different Loyola experience, but I would venture to say that all of us have grown as people because of our time here.

Although it may seem depressing at times that college is coming to an end, I have been realizing more and more lately that college ending is really what we make of it. We will all still stay in touch with those we have become close to, and we get to come back to great events like the Bull and Oyster Roast (except we no longer have to worry about classes or tests).

So, I would encourage all of you to stay in touch, plan a reunion of your own in Baltimore, or elsewhere, with old classmates, catch a basketball game, or log onto the website and see what is happening with the small Jesuit school that we have all called home for the last four years. The more we stay connected with each other, and the school, the better the years to come will be.

Finally, I would like to thank all of you for giving me the opportunity to be the president of this amazing class. I really believe that it is one of the best classes that Loyola has seen in recent history. As always, feel free to contact me for anything, and I will see you all at alumni events in the future!

Sincerely,

Blair Puscas

Senior Class President

Bull and Oyster Roast

Graduating from Loyola does not mean leaving forever. From the moment of graduation, alumni begin marking their calendars for the annual Bull and Oyster Roast, a feast/party that only comes around once a year. In 2007, as in years past, the senior class was invited to take part in the event, held on January 27. Dressed in formal attire, the Class of '07 and alumni from the past several years filed into the decorated Student Center, where they danced, ate gourmet food, and listened to live music for hours. The event provided the perfect opportunity to catch up with friends who have since moved on from life at Loyola. The Roast stretched throughout the building - each room hid a different revelation: Reitz Arena had buffets and game tables, the social center of the event; Boulder was transformed into a nightclub; and McGuire became a stage for some great live bands. However, perhaps the "sweetest" part of the evening was dessert, housed in the Reading Room. From cream puffs to cookies to cakes, seniors and alumni did not hesitate to stuff themselves before moving on to the next room to converse with friends or dance the night away.

All smiles, Jen Seelman, Jenn Bogdan, and Cathy Newman enjoy their time spent at the Roast. The night is a unique one at Loyola, when the Student Center is no longer the place to grab lunch or hang out between classes, but a place to party.

1. Singing along to the music, Alex Parker and Dan McGovern dance the night away with fellow seniors and alumni. Most of the dancing took place in Boulder, which was completely transformed into a club atmosphere, complete with disco lights and a DJ.

2. Liz Hohenadel and Eliza Schneider sample some of the meat and fish dishes served at the Roast. Each room had a different buffet set up, allowing guests to try a variety of flavors by the night's end.

3. As with most events this year, the Bull and Oyster Roast had a Baltimore theme. This helped to remind alumni of the defining qualities of Charm City, especially if they have since moved away.

Dressed up for the event, Caitlin Kolarsick and Emily Rosen take a break from the dance floor. The night was not only filled with dining and dancing, but also provided seniors with an opportunity to network and talk with alumni about something they were about to face - life after Loyola.

1. Dressed in tropical attire, Susanna Bagley and Amanda Moulton enjoy the first senior social that commemorates 250 days until graduation. Almost the entire class showed up to the SGA-sponsored event.

2. The "Margaritaville"-themed event helped Dan O'Hara and Lisa Ronco hold onto the summer spirit on one of the last warm days of the fall semester.

3. Senior 200s challenged the class to get creative by dressing up as anything that begins with the letter L. Liz Hohenadel came up with the idea to make a costume that transformed her into a player from the board game Life.

4. Half the fun of the "Put the L in Loyola" social was guessing what people were. In this case, Liz Nolan came as "little white lies" and Ashley Cook recreated the children's game Lite-Brite.

Held only a couple of days after Halloween, Senior 200s became another reason to find a costume. Blair Puscas and John Barton chose to dress up as a lumberjack and lifeguard, respectively.

It has been a unique staple of Loyola College for years: starting at 250 and every 50 days thereafter, seniors count down the days until graduation by (what else?) partying. Held in Reitz Arena, Senior 250s, 200s, 100s, 50s and 4s each had a different theme. All, however, shared one very important characteristic: they served as some of the most memorable and exciting nights of the year.

Senior 250s got it all started with "Margaritaville." Party City on York Road may as well have been an extension of Loyola's campus, considering how packed it was that afternoon, as students cleaned out the store of every lei, Hawaiian shirt, and straw hat it had in stock.

Senior 200s "Put the L in Loyola" by letting seniors dress however they wanted, as long as the costume title began with an L. There were lollipops, ladybugs, and even Linnanes. Some taped mathematical symbols to their shirts and showed up as "less than or equal to." If your name was Lauren or Larry, you did not even have to dress up at all. In fact, even if your name did not begin with an L, you could choose not to dress up, and go as a "loser" or "lazy."

At Senior 100s, the Class of '07 came as "Superheroes and Villains," battling it out on the dance floor. For 50s, Reitz Arena was transformed into the "Wild West," complete with a mechanical bull and cattle-roping machine. Students showed up in their best cowboy outfit and kicked up their boots to some country music. Just four days before graduation, a classic toga party was held. Originally to be held on the Quad, rain forced administrators to move the event to McGuire. Still, nothing could rain on our parade.

Countdown Parties

Maureen Hogan, Stacy Welch, and Joyce Ritz spend some time together during Senior 250s. Held on one of the first weekends of the school year, the event was a great way to catch up with friends after semesters spent abroad and the summer.

Countdowns

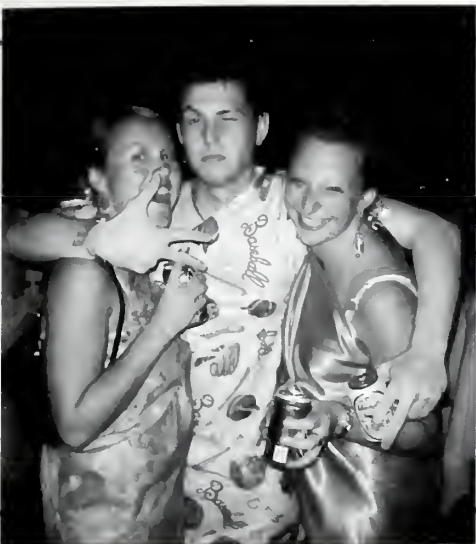

Not afraid to show off his legs, Scott Rediker showed up at the Wild West countdown in this daring ensemble, much to everyone's amusement.

Choosing to attend Senior 100s as superheroes, Eric Morris, Carrie Hamilton, and Amanda Levinson dressed up as characters from the movie The Incredibles.

Senior 50s proved to be a grand ole time for friends Christina McCabe, Leah Hansen, Amy Hanna, and Brittany Conahan.

1. Superheroes and villains put aside their differences for the night celebrating one hundred days to graduation. Most seniors choose characters from movies for this theme, such as Luke Golem as Clark Kent and Ashley Cipu as Cruella De Vil.

2. Lisa Ronco, Blair Snyder, Matt Messina, and Meagan Parrott crowd together on the dance floor at the Wild West social. To coincide with the theme, the DJ played both dance and country hits.

3. The countdown parties provide good excuses for the Class of '07 to dress up in things normally not seen in public, such as these togas sported by Kathleen Solano and Rich Spirio.

4. As evidenced by Erin Love, Nick Brown, and Mary Scott, the seniors that attended the last senior social not only had a good time, but also were more than willing to follow the dress code.

Even though the basic toga design was followed, many seniors opted to make theirs out of bright and random fabrics, such as Ryan Keller and Jeff DeGeorgia (joined here by Steph Samar).

1. Held the night before the Baccalaureate Mass, Gala is the most formal event of college. Girls show up in a variety of dresses and boys wear either a nice suit or tuxedo.

2. Kyle Marszalek waits patiently for a fresh carving from one of the many food stations. Seniors could sample as much of the food as they wanted but had to pay steep prices for drinks.

3. Gretchen Bell, Stefanie Ammiano, Maureen Skorupa, and John Gillis smile for the camera between dining and dancing. Since the event was held at the Renaissance Harborplace, seniors had the opportunity to walk around the beautiful hotel that overlooked the harbor.

Not letting go, Kathleen Hartnett takes to the dance floor with Paul Cubita. The popular dance songs played by the DJ kept the floor crowded for most of the night.

For one night, the Class of 2007 could feel like kids again. With memories of high school graduation and senior prom flooding back, we packed into our friends' cars and cabs (no limos this time around), and set out to our destination: the Renaissance Harborplace Hotel.

Dressed to impress, we grew overwhelmed at the sight: a colossal room stretched out before us, dotted with tables and a dance floor that beckoned to us. The perimeter of the room was lined with food stations, serving up an assortment of gourmet fare. Attendees passed the time conversing with friends, taking pictures, and showing off their moves on the dance floor. Originally slated to end at midnight, seniors got a new dose of energy when the DJ announced, to the surprise of everyone in attendance, that the event would run until 1 a.m. Thus, the party did not stop when it was supposed to - but then, at Loyola, has it ever?

Senior Gala

A common sight during Senior Week was the self-shot. Seniors took several pictures at the event to capture the moment, especially since they were looking their best.

Baccalaureate Mass

Though Senior Week was primarily a time of fun and games, the looming presence of graduation placed a certain gravity on the days leading up to it. On Friday, May 18, just a day before the Class of '07 walked across the stage at First Mariner Arena, students and their families gathered in Reitz for the Baccalaureate Mass. Father Linnane presided, while Father Daniel Ruff read the homily. Members of the senior class did all of the readings, and the Chapel Choir and Gospel Choir performed.

As perhaps the most significant part of the day, and very apropos for the culmination of a Jesuit education, students were asked to recite an Affirmation of Service, promising to apply Jesuit values over the course of their lives. While smiles and embraces showed appreciation and camaraderie on the part of the students, the mass was especially moving for parents. In a sense, it was a rite of passage for members of the Class of '07, who were in their final 24 hours of their undergraduate lives.

Father Linnane and fellow celebrants prepare the Eucharist. Although almost every seat in Reitz Arena was taken, there were plenty of Eucharistic ministers to accommodate.

1. Leading the congregation, Katherine Minahan and John Oghia sing hymnals at the mass. All of the readings and songs were performed by graduates.

2. Liz Nolan, Kathleen Solano, Allison Arbeeney, and Lisa Ronco pose for a picture after the mass. The liturgy is celebrated with the families of the graduates, similar to the New Student Convocation that took place in the same spot over four years ago.

3. The Gospel Choir performed during the ceremony. The Choir was able to fill Reitz Arena with their sound and was a highlight of the event.

4. Interpreting the music, Taylor Calderone did liturgical dances throughout the mass. Her smooth movements and choreography followed the themes of the mass.

Distinguished Teacher of the Year, Dr. Tim Stapleton led the faculty, staff, and administrator procession that began the ceremony. Traditionally, the entire college is invited to take part in the Baccalaureate Mass.

1. The ladies of this family enjoy themselves at the Hail and Farewell. The late night event included drinks, desserts, and a live band.

2. These parents have a great time on the dance floor. This was the main event during Senior Week when families were able to celebrate with the graduates.

3. The Mood Swings played live music throughout the night. The upbeat swing music got everyone out onto the dance floor.

4. Brian Halton dances with his younger relative. Not only did the seniors have fun, but their families enjoyed themselves as well.

Stella Ostrander and date take their turn on the dance floor with some fancy moves. Dancing was a popular way to spend the night as Reitz Arena was filled with good music.

Celebration was the theme of Senior Week, and Hail and Farewell did not fall short. The late night event took place in Reitz Arena and gave seniors and their families one last chance to celebrate the culmination of four years at Loyola.

They went all out with the set up for the night. There was a giant dance floor in the middle of the room and tables all around. The food selection was strictly desserts, and drinks were served as well. The most exciting part of the night was the live band. They played tons of swing music and it got everyone out onto the dance floor...even the parents.

The event was well-attended by both students and their families, making the night a great way to end the year.

Hail and Farewell

Lauren McShane and her family enjoy the coffee and desserts served at the Hail and Farewell. The cocktail party themed event was a great way for seniors to spend their last night at Loyola.

Commencement Ceremony

On Saturday, May 19, at First Mariner Arena in the heart of Baltimore, members of the Class of 2007 donned the caps and gowns. Backstage, before the show, we laughed, or chatted, trying to hide the nerves that came with knowing our time at Loyola all came down to only three more hours.

Jon Meacham, Managing Editor of Newsweek Magazine, served as the commencement speaker, reminding students of the power they would hold as they went forth into the "real world." One by one, members of the Class of 2007 were recognized for their achievements, as parents and relatives looked on from the stands.

When it was over, a new chapter in our lives had been written. For most, it was bittersweet. Four years of friends, four years of forming new relationships, four years of the best and worst classes we have ever taken, four years of experimentation, of Baltimore, of memories - four years of our lives had come to an end. However, looking back, most of us can say they ended wonderfully, and without much regret.

The medalists, students who had the highest average in their major department, were the last group of graduates to process toward their seats. Anticipation grew as the groups of students walked into the large arena filled with family and friends.

1. Patrick Delaney straightens his tassel before heading out to his seat. The time before the processional was perhaps the most nerve-wracking for the graduates.

2. Graduates look on as others are honored for their hard work. Several members of the community were given awards for service they have done in Baltimore.

3. Mary Czar sings the national anthem at the beginning of the ceremony. Her beautiful rendition set the mood for the rest of the event.

4. Straightening his hood and cords, Natasha Epps helps Marcus Mayfield before they walk out. Staff members and other students helped the graduates adjust the somewhat complicated attire.

This group of students poses for a picture while waiting for their turn to walk across the stage. The graduates managed to keep themselves entertained with the people around them while the ceremony was going on.

1. Stephanie Samar, Krystal Collins, Jennifer Bogdan, and Joyce Ritz take one last picture before heading out to the arena. The senior living areas became mini photo shoots as graduates took some last minute pictures with their friends.

2. Senior Class President Blair Puscas makes his address to his classmates. His speech called for the graduates to take what they have learned at Loyola and make a change in the world.

3. This graduate thanks her parents unconventionally for all their help through college. Many students wrote messages on their hats so their families could spot them in the crowd.

4. Paul Bancroft anxiously awaits his turn to walk across the stage. Although students were nervous about the graduation ceremony, they grew more excited the closer they got to walking.

After the ceremony, Liz Nolan is handed her diploma before exiting. The students were very happy to receive their diplomas immediately after they walked.

Commencement

Now officially alumni, Eric Morris, Kevin Tuliszewski, Brendan Ledley, Christina McCabe, Peter Wik, and Leah Hansen gather together right after graduating.

Amanda Wood looks over the crowd of people after the ceremony. Excitement, nervousness, and goodbyes filled the arena, and the streets, after the ceremony ended.

Jon Meacham, Managing Editor of Newsweek Magazine, gives the commencement address to the graduates. Meacham spoke about the importance of service and what graduates could accomplish with their Loyola education.

BEST OF WISHES

Senior Farewells

"The past is a source of knowledge, and the future is a source of hope. Love of the past implies faith in the future."

- Stephen Ambrose

Christopher James Cahill

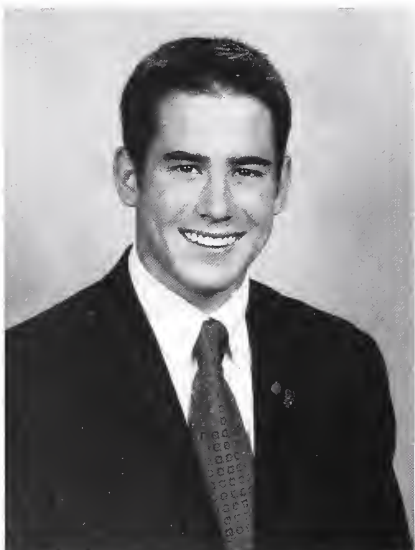

Congratulations to our firstborn son upon your graduation from Loyola College. It was the perfect choice following Chaminade High School. Many of your future decisions and accomplishments will be based on the education and the values you have received these last four years at Loyola.

Just be true to yourself. Stick to your goals. Have fun, but remember to be serious when it is warranted. Make wise choices. Share your many gifts. Be patient and be kind. We already know that you play fair. Keep enjoying baseball, golf, and skiing.

When life challenges you and it will, remember to rely on your faith, your family, and your friends.

Your natural warmth and wonderful sense of humor, combined with that great dimpled smile will help you go far in this world.

We are so proud of the fine young man that you have become. May all of your hopes and dreams come true. We wish you every happiness that life has to offer. May God continue to bless you.

We love you very much,
Mom, Dad, Sheila, and Conor

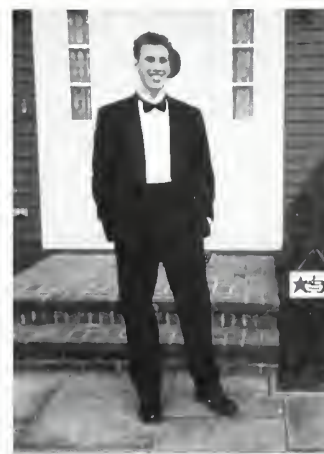

Adam:

We're so proud of the man that you've become, and happy that you've made it to this wonderful summit, a Loyola Grad, a great credential for a great guy!

Wherever life's journey takes you Adam, never forget the determination, hard work, prayers, and sacrifices that got you here. We know that it hasn't been easy, but few things worth taking along with you come easy. We know that your future is bright and that the best is yet to come, you can make it happen.

Remember that wherever the journey takes us in this world, we'll always be with you and you'll be with us.

Warmest congratulations and all our love,
Dad, Mom, and Annie

Adam E. Onzik

Dear Jaclyn,

Congratulations on your wonderful accomplishment!

As you graduate and we see the beautiful caring person you have become, our hearts are filled with pride.

Wherever life takes you, know that our love follows you.

*Always,
Mom, Dad, and Brian*

Jaclyn Marie Johnston

Jaclyn Marie Johnston

Dear Jessica,
We are so proud of all you have achieved and the beautiful person you are, both inside and out. The Loyola motto, "Strong Truths Well Lived," has truly been reflected in all you have done during these special and rewarding years. May the future bring you happiness, success, and fulfillment.

Love,
Mommy, Daddy, and Rebecca

CONGRATULATIONS JENNIFER ANN!

We are beyond proud of your accomplishments and endless determination. From the time you were a child we knew your determination would carry you to a fulfilling and meaningful future.

This is just the beginning for you...so go out there with your SPECIAL SMILE, along with all you have learned, and make your mark in this world! Your education and experiences at Loyola and in New Zealand will be the platform from which you go forth and build a better world.

Love, Dad, Mom, Christine, Bobby, and Nanny

Jennifer Ann Bowden

Dear Siobhan,

*We believe that you can accomplish
Anything you set out to do,
That you have many talents
And the wisdom to use them well...*

*We believe in your courage,
Your compassion, your integrity,
And your strength.*

We believe in you.

*Love,
Daddy and Mommy*

Siobhan Popoli

Throughout your life you have always been a source of love and pride. You have grown from a little boy with eyes full of wonder and amazement, and a soul full of laughter to a man with a compassionate heart and a sense of adventure, with that little boy in him who can change and brighten the world. We are so proud of the person you have become and the person we know you will be. We love you so much.

Mom and Dad

"You were my strength when I was weak; you were my voice when I couldn't speak; you were my eyes when I couldn't see; you saw the best there was in me."- This song reminds me of you in so many ways. For a brother I could always speak to when Mom and Dad weren't the answer, to someone I could laugh and be stupid with, and to a brother who always cared and showed love for me even through tough times. There is no explaining how much I appreciate you and how much life you've given me. No brother can ever come close to comparing with how much I love you and how much you mean to me. I always knew you'd be great at being a student, son, friend, and especially a brother. You're going to be great in life.

Infinite xoxo,
Nikki

Dear Kenneth,

I will never forget how proud Daddy and I were the day you were born. All our friends were joking about what college you would go to, (Pace, NYU, or St. John's). Daddy said you could go anywhere you put your mind to...You have never proved him wrong and have always made both of us proud. From the day you were born, acceptance to Regis HS, earning the rank of Eagle Scout, being accepted to Loyola's Honors Program, and acceptance into medical school, you brought tears of happiness to me. I know Dad is smiling in heaven. Congratulations! God Bless You!

Love always,
Mom, Michelle, and Christina

Dear Julie,
If only the power were in our hands, we'd give you life's best gifts. But we hope you'll see that the very best gifts are truly yours already - beginning with your independent nature and the power to choose your own way to find happiness. We are so proud of the wonderful, giving young woman you have become. Congratulations!

Dear Tom,

With wisdom, comes patience, with patience, comes understanding. You possess the qualities of wisdom, and the ability to use those qualities to improve your life and the lives of the people you touch, whether by work, play, or love. Daddy and I have always known you would have a wonderful, meaningful life. Use your gifts wisely to achieve your goals and help others. May God Bless You and Watch Over You in All You Do and Say Forever.

Love,
Mom and Lauren

Back in September of two thousand three,
 Blair went from 'C'-Town to 'B'-Town (MD).
 Lo! By October he'd won the campaign
 To serve out the freshman class president's reign.
 Sophomore year brought with it SGA's best:
 The rank of V.P. and a term as the "Prez."
 Junior year whisked Blair to New Zealand's isle
 To "sand surf" and study (well...once in a while!)
 Senior year came like a train without brakes,
 Three years of college secured in its wake.
 One final office from one final quest:
 Winning the senior class president's desk.
 Then, without warning, tomorrow arrived
 To ask nosy questions of purpose and life:
 Whom will you serve? Where will you live?
 How can you lead? and What can you give?
 The answer is in you, Blair...always has been,
 The faith of a mother and dad prayed it in.
 Your God will not fail you; your work will shine bright,
 Your life will stand tall 'gainst the dark of the night.
 So go now, dear son, you are ready to lift,
 The spirits of many; your years are the gift.
 Our prayers will surround you, God's wisdom will guide
 Your course as you surf across life's mighty tide.

We love you Blair!
 Mom, Dad, Alexa, Emily, and Julia

Dearest Jen,
Congratulations on all of your accomplishments at Loyola. We are so proud of you and the person you have become. As a new chapter of your life begins, remember you are always in our hearts, and you will always have our support. As your graduation approaches, don't feel sad. Instead, treasure the memories of the last four years.

Love always,
Mom, Dad, Tom, and Andrew

Jennifer Christina Kehrer

Julie,
 Congratulations on your graduation.
 We are all very proud of you and all of your accomplishments. You have made the very best of your years at Loyola and we are so happy that we could be a part of it. You have become a fine young woman - all that we could have ever have hoped for - and we eagerly anticipate the wonderful opportunities the future has in store for you.

With all our love,

Dear Jaclyn,
From the first minute we saw you, we knew you would be special. You smiled from your heart then, and you still do now. Your kind spirit is only overshadowed by your funny demeanor. Your personality is contagious, as evidenced by the number of friends and family always around you. You put others first and see the good in everyone. Your honesty and integrity is one we all admire and traits that we know will carry you far in life.

We are so proud of who you are, and how hard you have worked in all aspects of both school and athletics. You have made a lot of friends at Loyola that will be with you for a lifetime. We are lucky to have you in our lives!

From the Bronx, to Pearl River, to Maryland, you have grown and flourished and we wish you happiness and success wherever you go.

We love you! Congratulations to you and to the Class of 2007!!!

Love,
Mom, Dad, Kristin, Mike, and the family!!!

May God bless and keep you always,
May your wishes all come true,
May you always do for others,
And let others do for you.
May you build a ladder to the stars,
And climb on every rung,
May you stay forever young.

May your hands always be busy,
May your feet always be swift,
May you have a strong foundation
When the winds of changes shift.
May your heart always be joyful,
May your song always be sung,
May you stay forever young.

Dear Brianna,

What a long journey you have taken us on since a little girl. You have been an inspiration to all of us. You have grown into a beautiful, smart, and talented woman, one that we are very proud of. You are the sparkle in our eyes and the joy in our hearts. As you go on to the next chapter in your life, always continue to keep God close. We wish you much luck, joy, and happiness always. Remember to keep your family close to your heart, we are always here for you. Congratulations to you and the Class of 2007.

One of our greatest joys has been to watch you grow from our precious little "Mr. Wonderful" to the extraordinary young man you are today. We are so proud of your incredible achievements at St. Agnes, Chaminade High School, HES School of Economics and Business in Amsterdam, and Loyola College in Maryland. We admire your strong character and values, sharp intelligence, gentle manner, loving nature, adventurous spirit, delightful sense of humor, and charming ways. Thank you, Brian, for enriching our lives immeasurably.

Loyola has given you a firm foundation, great friends, and many warm memories to cherish. Embrace all the good that life has to offer. Use your talents wisely, for a happy and rewarding future awaits you. "And now here is my secret, a very simple secret: It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye." -Antoine de Saint Exupery

May God bless you always, and may all your goals be fulfilled.

Congratulations!

We love you very much,
Mom, Dad, Heather, Simon, and April '04

Our gratitude to all at Loyola who contributed to Brian's achievement.

Childhood Memories: "Yippers" and "Frinklers"

Special summers with far away grandparents
Pizza making, snowmen, and Italian songs with Dad
New York peanuts and Kansas dugouts with Mom
Gingerbread houses and Miss Moore projects
You dancing gracefully through it all, filling our lives with joy.

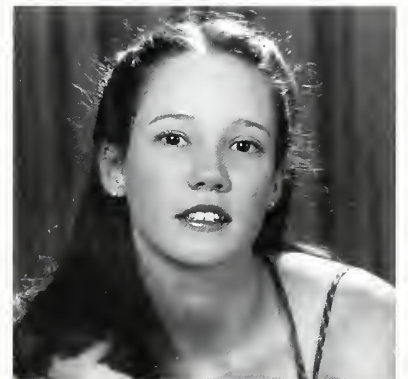

College Years:

Four years ago we reluctantly sent our "little girl" across the continent to pursue a Jesuit education. In what seemed like the blink of an eye and a blur of constant activity, we watched in amazement as you passionately pursued your education, a job with Campus Ministry, volunteer work, officer positions (and a lot of work) with the Honors Program Council and Alpha Sigma Nu, a semester in Rome, and on your own, a summer in New York, amongst other activities too numerous to count. Loyola offered you all of these remarkable experiences.

In the end, Loyola and you sent us back a well educated woman of character and resolve, a wonder of the best.

Congratulations to you and Loyola for a job well done. We have great admiration for you both.

You are loving...

when your own pain does not blind you to the pain of others.

You are wise...

when you know the limits of your wisdom.

You are true...

when you admit there are times you fool yourself.

You are alive...

when tomorrow's hope means more to you than yesterday's mistake.

You are growing...

when you know what you are but not what you will become.

You are free...

when you are in control of yourself and do not wish to control others.

You are honorable...

when you find your honor is to honor others.

You are generous...

when you can take as sweetly as you can give.

You are humble...

when you do not know how humble you are.

You are thoughtful...

when you see me just as I am and treat me just as you are.

You are merciful...

when you forgive in others the faults you condemn in yourself.

You are beautiful...

when you don't need a mirror to tell you.

You are rich...

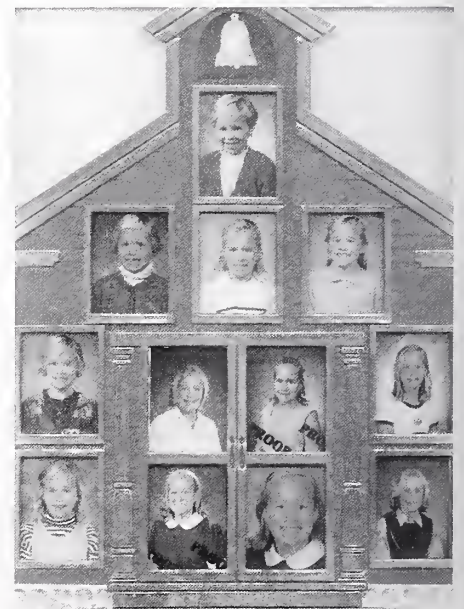

when you never need more than what you have.

You are you...

when you are at peace with who you are not.

Congratulations!!!

Dad, Mom, Brad, and Tommy

CONGRATULATIONS BERNIE!

November 1, 1988: Your first day of preschool. We cried after dropping you off. The house was so quiet... baby Lisa slept peacefully... we couldn't wait to bring you home. But you rambled on excitedly about your new adventure... we had to send you back.

August 29, 2003: Your first day at Loyola. We cried after dropping you off. The house was so quiet that Lisa wouldn't sleep there... Missy slept in your room, your picture beside her... we couldn't wait to bring you home. But you rambled on excitedly about your new adventure... we had to let you stay.

May 19, 2007: You graduate. At last you're coming home! But soon you'll ramble on excitedly about your next new adventure. And we'll encourage and support you as you pursue your goals. You have the brightest future; we are so very proud of you. And while it's impossible to forget the face of that little boy who turned our quiet home upside down, we wouldn't trade him for the mature young man that you have become.

Remember: work hard... play hard... and always follow your dreams.

Dearest Joyce,

To my daughter, no more a child, on whom these many years my love has shone, please take pleasure in the pleasure of my pride, however much you've managed on your own. Your diploma means a future without boundaries, a world that is full of energy and fun. Even as you dance upon your stage, growing ever more endowed with grace, remember that my love will never change, a place for you beyond all time and place.

So as you reach for all life has to offer, remember that you are second to none. Pursue your goals, yet keep your loved ones close, as you utilize your talent and ambition. Let your friends and family give you their support, and you will master every challenging transition. Do what you will within your wide world, understanding in your own wise way, always knowing that you are my field of wonder, the wild, star-strewn moor on which I wander, even as I honor you at this time. And always, Joyce, know you can achieve the things you really want, if you believe and trust in yourself.

Love always,

a well-deserved

dedication

By Terry Foy

During his tenure at Loyola, Dr. David Haddad has served faithfully as the Vice President of Academic Affairs and, in so doing, enriched the academic vibrancy of the campus for which he cared so dearly. He faithfully promoted Loyola's Jesuit mission and achieved many things through his time in office, such as expanding the size of the faculty and increasing participation in service-learning curriculum. At every turn, Dr. Haddad kept the interests of Loyola students close to his heart. Upon Rev. Harold Ridley's death in January 2005, Haddad assumed the college's presidency on an interim basis and nobly steered Loyola through one of its gravest times of need.

For these and all of his other gifts to the Loyola community, the Class of 2007 is proud to dedicate this volume of the Evergreen Annual to Dr. David Haddad. We thank you for all your hard work and wish you all the best in your retirement.

Final Words

Joyce Ritz

Having worked on the yearbook for the past three years, I knew that my time would come to write a goodbye message. However, as with every homework assignment, paper, book I had to read, or hard decision I had to make, I never really thought about them, or what they really meant, until the few hours before they were due. To have to briefly and eloquently sum up my four years at Loyola is probably the hardest thing I have had to do, and this was my major.

My time here, and specifically working on the yearbook, has been a life changing experience and I am a different person for it. The people I have met, the experiences I have had, and the opportunities that I had working on the Annual are priceless and will always be my fondest memories looking back on my time at Loyola. A special thanks to my wonderful roommate and friend, Jenn Bogdan, who helped put some of the finishing touches on this book.

Emily and Kristen, thank you for taking the time to teach me everything you know and continually supporting me in my editorial positions, I am so glad I got to know you. Maureen, in so many ways "you have completed me." I could not have chosen a better person to work with, and your friendship has been very special to me, especially these last two summers. To Jenna and Michelle, thank you so much for all you have done the past two years. I am so proud of you guys and I am glad I got to know you. Good luck with everything you do. And finally, to the Evergreen Annual Yearbook Office, thank you for taking me in when I sought acceptance, for giving me a place to live when I didn't have one, and for always being open.

Before I end, I want to say a special thanks and congratulations to all my friends who have helped me these past four years. Thank you for shaping me into who I am, I love you, and wish you the best.

Thank you Loyola and the Evergreen Annual Yearbook for making my college experience better than I ever thought possible.

I am approaching the task of writing this message as I do almost all of my assignments - starting it at almost five in the morning, hours before it is due, while sitting in bed and listening to matt pond PA. And although it may seem unconventional, I wouldn't have it any other way. This is how I got through my schoolwork and this is how I'm going to finish the project that takes up just as much, if not more of my time and dedication - the yearbook.

After I finish this piece and complete the last page of the book, another chapter in my life is ending. By now, it just seems like second nature, I don't remember what it's like to go to school and not have to spend numerous hours outside of classes designing layouts, choosing pictures, and writing and editing copy. And as much as I might complain about all the pages we have left to do, or the bruises on my arms from carrying boxes around campus, or the pictures never having enough resolution, I can't help but love being a part of it all and seeing the final result.

Serving as an editor for the Evergreen Annual has given me more life and work experience than I could have ever imagined (just ask all the people that have interviewed me), and for that I am extremely grateful. However, I could not have made it this far without the help and love of some very special people. Emily - Thank you for always having faith in the staff and me. I've learned so much from your input and value the times we spend together. Joyce - Not only have you been a great co-editor, but a great friend. I think we've probably talked about every topic imaginable and it never gets old. I know you'll always be there to listen and I appreciate that. Thank you for putting up with my pickiness and requests and of course, finishing my sentences. Jenna - I wish I could have half of the drive you have. You never cease to amaze me at the things you can do, all the while with a smile on your face. Michelle - I can vividly remember that time you IMed me saying you were interested in joining the staff. Little did I know how that small-gesture would lead me to one of the strongest friendships I've ever had. I could not imagine surviving this past year without you, both as a friend and as a member of the staff. Your eye for design and numerous contacts helped us put together some great pages.

I would also like to thank all my friends and family, near and far (as in those west of the Mississippi). I feel extremely blessed to have people who love and support me, especially during the times when I tend to make things difficult. We could not have completed this book without last minute contributions from Nick Brown, Elizabeth Hohenadel, Christina McCabe, Gregory Pace, and Lisa Ronco. I am forever grateful.

As many people can attest to, I couldn't wait to finish this book. But of course now that's it almost done, it's hard to imagine life without the late nights in our windowless office, where I spent countless hours laughing with the staff, stressing over deadlines, and even-storing my stuff over the summer. But as they say, all good things must come to end, and I hope you feel the same way when you finish looking through the 2007 edition of the Evergreen Annual.

Technical: The 2007 edition of the Evergreen Annual, the student yearbook for Loyola College in Maryland, was printed by Jostens, Inc at its plant in State College, PA. The publication contains 233 pages, trimmed to 9 x 12 inches, covering September 2006 to May 2007 and had a press run of 3000. Chuck Sabia served as our Jostens representative and Holly Treaster was our plant consultant.

Rick Brooks and the 2007 staff developed the cover, using a picture taken by Jim Rainey, and a horizon outline created from a picture of Baltimore's Inner Harbor. The cover consists of a linear grain on Special Litho 470 material with applications of Process Color 317 and UV Coating Cover 350.

Signatures one and two and multiples ten and twelve were printed in four-color process; all other pages were printed in black.

Our standard font was Garamond, with additional fonts Benguiat, Bookman, Celestia Antiqua, Daisy, Felix Script, Fenice, Jade, Kabel Book, Kaufmann Script, Myriad Condensed, Repel, Times, and Zapf Chancery.

All spreads were created by our staff, some using ideas developed by Rick Brooks, with Jostens' online program Yearbook Avenue and Adobe Photoshop CS.

Photography: The Evergreen Annual was contracted with DaVor Photography. Jim Rainey served as our customer service representative. Senior portraits were taken by Dana Helmuth in October and Gerald Razler in January. All other photos seen in the book were either taken by DaVor employees, our staff, or submitted by students and staff of Loyola.

Gratitude: The editors wish to thank our small but supportive staff for all their hard work this year. We realize that most times things were hectic and unclear, and we really appreciate those who stuck with us through those times. Special thanks goes to Emily Shenk, our patient adviser who never seemed to get upset with us, even though we gave her plenty of reasons. We appreciate her guidance and optimism for this year's book and years beyond. None of this would be possible without our representative Chuck Sabia. Not only did he treat us to great dinners, but also seemed to know every answer to whatever question we had, helping us to accomplish our goals for this book. A big thank you goes out to Jim Rainey, our DaVor contact. He always accommodated our requests, no matter how late we made them. We also have a great deal of appreciation and respect for all our professional representatives at Jostens and DaVor, as well as our many campus contacts: Mark Broderick, Deb Haubert (great job on your first year of dealing with us!), Dana Dalton, and Karen Thomas at Student Activities, and Kim McCabe at the Post Office. We couldn't have come this far without you. Last but not least, a huge thank you goes out to all the members of the Loyola community that contributed to the content of Outside the Lines. We worked for an obscene amount of hours on this book, hoping you'll enjoy it and appreciate it from the moment you receive it and well into the future. Without your pictures, stories, and words, we would have nothing to show. So thank you, we hope you like this year's edition of the Evergreen Annual.
